THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Deacon & Peterson, Publishers.
NUMBER SIXTY-SIX SOUTH THIRD ST.

Two Dollars Per Annum, In Advance.
THREE DOLLARS IF NOT PAID IN ADVANCE.

EDMUND DEACON, HENRY PETERSON, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER: NEUTRAL IN POLITICS.

CLUBS.—FOR TERMS TO CLUBS, SEE PROSPECTUS ON THIRD PAGE.

DEVOTED TO MORALITY, PURE LITERATURE, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS, AGRICULTURE, THE COMMERCIAL INTEREST, SCIENCE, ART AND AMUSEMENTS.

VOLUME XXVIII. PHILADELPHIA, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1848. WHOLE NO. 1426.

Humorous Story.

MY FIRST FIGHT.

[For the following laughable story and the accompanying engraving, we are indebted to "Wooddribbs and Vagabonds," by W. E. Burton, a humorous work not long since published by Messrs. Carey & Hart, of this city.]

I well remember the particulars of my first fight. I was a mere stripling—a lad of seventeen—when I ventured to challenge a gray-headed veteran, whose military whiskers and mustachios alone ought to have created reverence; but I was in love—horrible, consuming, omnipotent love! and I would have confronted the whole of Bonaparte's cuirassiers in the battle charge, rather than have submitted to the flagrant outrage committed on my self-esteem.

Mary! the fairy dream of my earliest love, the darling of my juvenility! How well do I remember the dark-brown hair that waved in rich luxuriance over her round and polished shoulders—the delicate tracery of the slightly arched eye-brows that overhung, like Cupid's bow, the speaking orbs of hazel tint, with their arrows of flashes of enthusiasm, or the languor of a melting love-glance, when the long and silken lashes almost wooed each other in a soft embrace. I used to gaze for hours upon the delicate whiteness of her marble forehead, the rich crimson of the small and well-shaped lips, of sufficient plumpness to ensure a warmth of soul, (let every man avoid a thin-lipped woman!) and the pearly treasures of her mouth that never opened but to discourse most eloquent music. Let us not prate of the harmony of the spheres, the twanging of Apollo's lyre or the magic melody of Memnon's head! Can aught excel the wondrous beauty of a woman's tongue—the soft rich murmurings of affection's voice—the type and concentration of harmonic loveliness—attuned in Heaven and uttered first in Paradise, to the endangerment of the heaven's soul!

For many months I was content to gaze with boyish rapture upon my Mary's face, not dreamed of happiness beyond the privilege of sight. Chance, poor mortal's everlasting friend, afforded me the opportunity of an introduction to my charmer. With the audacity of youth, I declared my passion—I was not repulsed. A gentle squeeze of the hand answered my vows of eternal adoration, and I retired to my chamber revelling in the delirium of accepted love.

As I was progressing to Mary's residence in the morning, it was greeted by the aged nurse of my childhood. "So, so, we are seen to have a wedding, eh? I know all about it, though the maiden's blushes are yet burning in her cheek."

"Why, nurse, you are quite poetical in your salutation. How did you obtain your wonderful intelligence? has Mary spoken of her promise?"

"Not with her tongue, boy; not with her tongue. But I have surer grounds for my belief; my daughter Bessy, who waits upon your sweetheart, has told me how Mary talked of you, and kissed your portrait all night long."

"My portrait, nurse! You must mistake."

"No, no; Bessy could not obtain a sight, but of course it was your miniature that was sent in the letter she received last night—that long long letter she so often read over, and kissed so fervently. For more than an hour did she sit up in bed, and read your letter, and kiss the likeness of that man who was destined to be her heart."

This information sadly puzzled me. I had never owned a miniature, nor had I written to Mary upon any occasion. Jealousy fixed its claws upon my heart; I believed that I had been deceived—fooled!

I ran to Mary's dwelling—she was walking in the garden with a friend! There was a sinister expression in little Bessy's face when she gave me the information. A friend! what friend! Mary was an orphan—a stranger—the daughter of an ancient emigrant, who had long since departed from this ephemeral world. I had heard Mary say that she was without a friend in the world, and I loved her the better for it. What, then, could this friend be, who had so mysteriously appeared, but an accepted lover whose secret addresses had thus suddenly come to light!

I hastened through the hall, and down the garden steps. There was a favorite arbor overgrown with flowering shrubs and fragrant creepers—where the gaudy rose mixed its petals with the modest jasmine, and the bell-flowers of the convolvulus hung in rich profusion. I knew the locality of this bower of love, for, boy-like, I had often climbed the wall and watched my nymph seek its lonely shelter from the noon-tide sun. I hastened down the principal walk of the garden with a vigorous and determined shoulder. A female's voice, the voice of my Mary, sounded on my ear—she was warbling a merry ditty, and a rich manly voice chorused the refrain. A sudden turn brought them in my view; their backs were towards me—but I saw Mary, my Mary, leaning on the shoulder of a man in a military dress, and the scoundrel's arm encircled my fair one's waist. I dashed madly forward, and tore the presumptuous arm from its dear encumbrance with a violence that hurled the soldier into the prickly recesses of a row of gooseberry bushes.

"By my faith, but that's a decent hyet, anyhow," said he, "and if it's not an impertinent question, I'd like to be knowing for what!"

"Why have you behaved with this ungentlemanly violence!" said Miss Mary, with an aggravating calmness of voice.

I could not speak. I made horrible mouths at her, and thumped my breast, and shook my fist, as I pointed to the soldier in the gooseberry bush.

"Be asy, there, making those faces, like a monkey taking medicine. If you're poorly, say so—or just wait till I invagle the frill of my shirt and the tail of my coat from these confounded thorns, bad luck to 'em, and I'll set you to rights in no time."

I walked away; had I stayed longer, I should have shamed my manhood, and drowned my rage in a copious flood of tears.

I determined to call my hated rival to a strict account, and exact from him the severest satisfaction. Harry Wilton, a fine hearty fellow, who had been my college chum, lived but a few miles off; and to him alone could I look for the friendly offices usual in affairs of honor. I saddled my horse, and rode to his house. I galloped furiously down the road—a sow with her progeny endeavored to cross before my rapid progress—I did not attempt to stop my horse, but, cursing all females, rode on. The pigs were dispersed in all directions—my horse tied on the toes of a young parker, and he squeaked his opinion of the outrage in tones of pathetic appeal. My fancy converted his cries into the dying shrieks of my rival, and I grinned most horribly a ghastly smile.

Harry Wilton heard my story with evident delight. Harry had an obvious penchant for arranging these little affairs; he had been twice successful with his man, and eagerly seized on another opportunity.

"Certainly, my dear boy," said he, "you must fight. An Irishman, you say! all the better—Irishmen never balk the game. As for the lady, 'whistle her off,' nor think of giving up 'your unhonored free condition' for such an extant coquette."

"But her explanation may put all smooth again" said I, sobering down a little.

"I hope so; but 'after battle be it then,'" said Harry.

The young men of the village had lately formed a dramatic institution, and Harry had been elected one of the directors. Shakspeare was his present lord of the ascendant, and he acted his conversation with a pretty sprinkle of quotations.

"With your love or the lady I'll not interfere—but your rival must not 'escape passage free;' he has 'poisoned you i' the garden for your estate' of love, and 'you must to the wars for yeer redress.'"

My friend undertook to instantly communicate with my rival, and report progress at my house in the course of the afternoon.

The fair flower of my love had been snatched from my grasp, and I held in her the loveliest of the weed revenge. The "affair" was in the hands of another, and I rode slowly home "inspirited" and sad. At the dinner-table I was sulky and silent; the events of the morning so completely absorbed my attention, that I filled my wine-glass from a decanter of brandy, and gulped it hastily down. I was unused to the force of ardent spirit; the fiery liquor burned my young throat. I rose hastily, and in my agitation upset a large tureen full of bean soup into my landlady's lap, and deposited the contents of a red-hot chafing-dish on the silk dress of my left-hand neighbor.

Sneaking out of the parlor in the height of the confusion, I retired to my own room, and, placing a bottle of the best Brigham on the table, awaited the arrival of my friend Wilton. In a short time he burst joyously into my chamber.

"I have done the deed," said he, "and to my entire satisfaction. 'Brutus is an honorable man.' He will fight you with much pleasure!"

"Did he offer any explanation?" said I.

"Not a word, but behaved in a most gentlemanly manner. You did not tell me that he was a veteran officer, 'bearded like the pard, sudden and quick in quarrel.'"

"Who is he? What is his name?" said I.

"Major Kilmeny—just arrived. He smiled when I began to 'unfold my tale,' but we soon settled the when, the where, and the how. Day-break—in the meadow at the back of the old mill—eight paces—fire together."

"Who is to be his second?"

"He did not say. His groom, a fine fresh young fellow, who held my horse while I went up stairs, tells me that the major is a glorious shot. Knocks a sixpence off the edge of a wine-glass without cracking the crystal—kills a bee on the wing, with a pistol bullet, without injuring the honey bag. You are a lucky fellow!"

"I am, indeed," said I, with a piteous sigh, and an alarming elongation of countenance.

"To have the honor of 'fleshing your maiden sword,' with a veteran of such chivalrous proticnsions!" What sort of a shot are you?"

"Never fired off a pistol in my life," said I.

"All the better. Chance may direct a surer aim." One more glass of wine each, and then your 'pistols, powder, balls provide, with every thing beside;' we will adjourn to old Bunkle's graveyard, and I'll give thee 'bloody instructions how to act.'"

The graveyard! was an ominous choice of a place for practice. Harry's report of the stranger's prowess rather bothered me, and the honor of fighting a veteran, did not seem, in my unpractised eyes, a sufficient counterpoise to the danger I encountered.

"As we walk," said Wilton, "I wish to impress some fugitive lines upon your memory. They were taught me by an old Virginia soldier, and were considered sublime when gentlemen fought duels, and Bowie knives were things that were not.

"There is no shot like a low shot,
And a pop shot is a drop shot."

These few words contain a cyclopedia of wisdom! There is no shot like a low shot—fire high, and you must mass your man, particularly at a short distance. The shape of the butt, and the nature of the grasp, must rose the barrel from a level, unless intentionally depressed. A pop shot is a drop shot—the secret of success in dueling is simply this—fire first, and whether you hit your man or no, you disorder his aim, and that is fifty per cent in your favor. Every spectator knows that the first sight is the truest aim—therefore blaze away as soon as you cover your man with your muzzle."

We were amongst the gravestones. Wilton loaded the pistols, and pointing out an ugly cherubim, desired me to knock his nose off. I fired, but the bullet flew wide of the mark. Several succeeding attempts were equally futile.

"Hallos! 'thus bad begins but worse remains behind.' But it serves us right; we have no business to desecrate these memento-stones, or make these flying beads dance off by our ball practice. An hour's sharp shooting in a graveyard would make 'a sure derangement of epitaphs,' as Mrs. Malaprop says. This will be a fitter target."

Wilton picked up a piece of chalk or limestone, and on the black painted enclosure of the burial ground commenced drawing the outlines of a human figure.

"There—suppose this to be your rival. There are his broad shoulders, 'the front of love himself,' and there his bushy brain case—not forgetting his whiskers. By the way, I think it must be his whiskers that captivated your lady love's frail heart. I cannot see what else there is loveable about him, for he is on the shady side of fifty—in 'the winter of his discontent,' as I should say, and decidedly ill-looking."

"Most decidedly, and I." "In my opinion the most ill-looking man I ever saw."

"Then take better aim now, and crack his cuticle. Fire! Brave! Your bullet has gone into the thick of his left whisker. What would the beau-killer say if he saw that!"

"Its not much he'd want to say, any how," said a voice that I immediately recognised as belonging to the hero of the gooseberry bush. "I'm thinking that the spalpeen, wid the popgun in his fist, wouldn't be as easy in his aim if the figure on the wall was only alive and kicking, and ready to pop a bullet in return."

PRACTISING FOR THE FIGHT.

"I'm thinking that the spalpeen wid the popgun in his fist, wouldn't be as easy in his aim if the figure on the wall was only alive and kicking, and ready to pop a bullet in return."

My rival was standing within a few paces of us, leaning on a gravestone.

"Sure it's a mighty illigant pastime I've catched ye at. Firing at my shadow, and I close by. Will I walk round, and let you popat me for an hour or so by way of rehearsal, or have you had enough, shoulder to stay your stomachs for the night? Ah, then, I see ye're not greedy, any way. I'll be wishing you a good evening till the morning; and hope ye'll excuse the remarks of 'an ill-looking fellow on the shady side of fifty.' If ye want amusement, ye jaze of gooseons, just dig a grave, and I'll be bail it will be occupied before the time the morrow."

He left us with a low bow. Wilton and I stared at one another, perfectly ashamed of having been caught in practice of such deeds, and of the illiberal remarks in which we had freely indulged. The pistols were replaced in the case, and we walked silently home.

Bessy had been waiting, with a message from Mary, desiring me not to fail in calling upon her that night. I sent word that I would write to her, and decline further communication. Wilton left me, promising to rouse me at five in the morning.

I penned a long expostulatory epistle to the recipient Mary, and kindly laid my death to her charge. A few family letters were scribbled—a short will and testament executed—and I went to bed. I mention these important affairs in a brief and familiar way, but I would not have to undergo such another evening's occupation for untold sums of gold. My mind was so agitated that I could not sleep. A dose of a few minutes' duration seemed drawn out to an age of torture. I dreamed of blood—of horrible wounds, and pangs of death. Ghastly faces crowded round my bed—my mother and my sister, with shrieks that scared my brain, were clawing my mangled body from the mortal wounds made jealous by Mary's stored upon the brink, and laughed aloud. The sudden firing of a pistol-shot seemed to penetrate my heart, and roused me into consciousness. I dozed again—my soul had entered into the shape of a honey-bee, and I was flying distractedly through the air, endeavoring to escape from the shots of myriads of whiskered veterans who were firing at me with their pistols. I saw Mary sitting in her bower—I flew to her for protection—she killed me with her fan!

One dream was impressed so vividly upon my mind, that I was awake some minutes before I could convince myself that it was unreal. I dreamed that I had followed Wilton's advice, and had shot my rival dead before he could draw trigger. The hell of conscience was poured in upon me, and I knew that I had committed wilful murder. My rival's blood-stained countenance pursued me all my life, for I lived through ages in a moment's space. Visions of insulted justice haunted me—the court of law—the trial for life—the sentence—and the execution! I would not sleep that night again for less than certainty of Heaven's bliss!

Wilton found me in the morning nervous and unrefreshed. I started, as I gazed upon the reflection of my blood-shot eyes and haggard cheeks in the glass, and was afraid that my friend would observe them, and doubt my courage. But cowardice was not in my nature. My rival was a veteran; I was an inexperienced boy—a mere child—a child in life as ever precious to the young. I met my man upon the battle-field with a firm gait and an unblenching eye, but thoughts of home weighed heavily upon my heart.

My rival was on the ground before us. He was alone, but his groom was in sight.

"Ye'll excuse me then entirely, gintlemin, in regard to my second, seeing I'm a stranger in the place, and unbeknown'st to ye all; but, if I'm kill, sure ye can keep ye're own secret, and if it's my luck to pop my little foreard from your face. Every spectator knows that the first sight is the truest aim—therefore blaze away as soon as you cover your man with your muzzle."

I thought this proceeding very much out of order, but Wilton bowed and obeyed. Eight paces were measured off, and I was placed opposite my rival.

"In regard to the tools, if it's all the same, will I use my own little barkers? they're more easy to the hitch of my hand, and I'll squib the fellow off that ye may see their loading."

A yellow bird was perched on the top of a mullen stalk some twenty paces to the left.—The major fired, and the bird was blown to atoms. Wilton and I exchanged glances.

"Now, Mistha Wilton—the word, if you plase, sir."

"One—two—three. Fire!"

I had resolved to discharge my pistol, as Wilton advised, with the utmost dispatch after the giving of the signal. But simultaneous with its utterance, I felt a smart tap on the top of my head, and knew that I was hit. I fired in return, but wide, very wide of my mark, and the major spread out his arms, as if to catch my errant ball. I threw down the pistol, and, knocking off my hat, put up my hands to my forehead, expecting to feel the trickling blood, but I was unable to discover the locality of my wound. Wilton ran to me, and said, with much agitation—

"You are hurt!"

"I am," said I, "but my head is so numbed by the blow that I cannot find the place."

"If it's the wound ye're looking for, plase to feel the felt."

Wilton picked up my hat, and in the front of the edge of the crown we discovered a round hole. The bullet had passed completely through, singeing the lining of the crown, and, of course, had gone within a couple of inches of my skull, but luckily had not touched it.

"And a bad shot, too," said the major; "but better luck next time. If ye've another barker convenient, we'll proceed wid our peppering, as I'm in a trifle of a hurry, fearing lest I'll keep the breakfast waiting."

Wilton handed me another pistol. "He has not asked you to apologize," said my friend with a heavy sigh, "and you have no way of getting out of the scrape, unless I plead the irregularity of having but one second, and object to proceed."

"It would now be sheer cowardice," said I; "we must go on—the next shot will settle it. I have no doubt."

We resumed our stations. Wilton had given the word "one"—when a piercing shriek distracted our attention; and Mary, rushing from behind the hill, threw herself—not into my arms, but round the major's neck. When I beheld her staggering across the field, I had lowered my pistol, and my heart warmed towards the disconsolate maiden; but when her white round arms encircled the swarthy form of my antagonist, and her fair cheek received not his whiskered face, I felt that I could kill the object of her affections, and rejoice in her despair.

"Oh, uncle, do not harm him! you promised me not to resent his conduct. Do not kill him, dearest Uncle Terence—for I love him—dearly love him."

The weapon of death dropped harmlessly upon the turf, and Mary fell at his feet! she was hanging round the neck of her uncle in intercade for my safety—for the safety of him she dearly loved. In a moment, we were in one another's arms. The veteran was Terence Kilmeny, her mother's brother. He had forgot his way to rank and competency, and had become a soldier of fortune. Intelligence of his relative's child, and in her secret wished to pass the end of his pilgrimage. Mary had just told him about our mutual love, when I so rudely disturbed them in the garden; and he was arranging plans for our future happiness, at the very instant I pushed him amongst the gooseberry bushes.

The old soldier could not resist the chance of a good joke. He accepted my challenge, but did not intend to meet me; my miserable firing in the graveyard resolved him to 'no receiving a shot,' and as he could make sure of his aim to the utmost nicety, he determined to frighten me by firing in return.

I need not tell the end of this affair, which took place some years ago. My eldest daughter, Mary, is the doll-like miniature of her mother; my boy Terence is sitting on the knee of his great uncle, and listening to one of his many stories of distant lands and days long past. Wilton stood godfather yesterday to my last born son, Harry, and we had a hearty laugh in the evening over a reminiscence of my first fight.

Pictures of Life.

THE PENALTIES OF GUILT;
OR,
THE FORSAKEN CHILD.

BY THE HON. MRS. NORTON.

CHAPTER I.

"My boy! Henry, I cannot leave my boy!"

Such were the words, half wildly repeated over and over again (as if they constituted all the reasoning or argument of which she was capable) uttered by Madeline Wentworth, as she sat convulsively sobbing, her face buried in her hands, and her whole frame shaking with a paroxysm of despairing grief. By her side stood a handsome, rackly-looking man, in whose pale brow more perplexity than sympathy was visible, and who seemed impatiently waiting till the fit should subside sufficiently to enable her to hear him. Twice his lips parted, and his arm fell from the mantle-mantel-piece where he had been leaning, and twice he relinquished the attempt to soothe that misery of which he was at once the cause and the witness. At length the tempest ceased; the weary head sank back on his arm, and the strong eyes looked up to him in melancholy silence, as if hoping for counsel.

"Madeline! my beloved Madeline, calm yourself; believe me, I have not a selfish wish or thought concerning you. If you find you cannot, after all, make up your mind to take a decided step, if the society of your child (as you say) is so necessary to your happiness, I would not press you to do aught for which hereafter you might reproach me. It is not for the sake of my own wild dream of happiness—to see those sweet eyes shining upon me through the long day—to hear those sweet lips welcome me ever on my return to our home with words of tenderness—to be able to call you mine—my own, that I have urged this measure upon you. It is because my heart is burning at all that you endure; your tears, your complaints have maddened me.

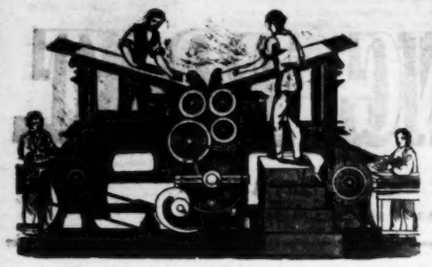
"If I could know you away, safe from the brutality of the man to whom you have been sacrificed—if I could know you at peace, I should be happier than I have dared hitherto to see you face again! Did not your own letter bring me to your side? that letter so full of love and of despair, that, sorrow-dead as I was by fools and chatterers, I could not repress the groan that burst from my lips as I read it? Did not your own promise embolden me to make arrangements for our departure while he was absent? and now, my Madeline, weakened by momentary agitation, you would relinquish plans which have been the work of months to contrive. You have a home so wretched, that life seems scarce worth living on such terms; a man whose temper and character are well known, will not heed the lavish of condemning tongues will speak your name in pity and sorrow, and even those whispers," said Henry Marchmont, eagerly, as she shrank from his side—"even those whispers you shall not hear. We will go to Italy, to Spain, to the wilds of America, where you will, so that we forget all but our own love, our own existence.

"Your child—nay, hear me without weeping, Madeline; hear me, and then decide (you have still the power to decide on remaining.) Your child will not be left desolate—an only son—the heir to a peerage. Do you think that ambitious and selfish Lady Wentworth would be as careful a solicitude as your own, if not with the same tenderness? Do you think that the beautiful spirit of Lionel Wentworth will suffer the guards of his future prosperity to slumber! Even if the father had no father's feeling, he would foster and cherish his brother's heir.

"Lord Wentworth has paid his debts, settled an annuity upon him, and shown more apparent kindness than ever he evinced, till the birth of your boy gave a hope of continuing the title and estates in a direct line. Their whole souls are centred in that child: and you, my Madeline, you would relinquish my love, and drag on a life of wretchedness for a vain shadow—the hope of devoted affection, from that little being whose first few years are all that ever can be yours. You think of your infant child; but will the boy at Eton, who neither sees nor comprehends your love or your sorrow, will the youth at college, who considers a week at home a tax on his holidays, will the heir presumptive to the Wentworth property, finishing his education on the continent, and rarely writing you a hurried letter—will he be so great a comfort, so dear a pleasure, as to counterbalance all this lonely misery? Will there not be hours, days, years, when you may regret the love that could only end with life; that love which would have haunted your steps like a shadow, and given a new youth to your withering days?"

Madeline Wentworth left her home, her child, her husband, and learnt that there is no misery like the curse of remorse—no tears so bitter as those in which self-reproach is mingled. It was all true that Henry Marchmont had averred; true that her husband was selfish, brutal, violent; true that many had pitied her for being his wife; true that her boy was the spoilt idol of vacillating hearts, in a family where there were no ties; true that her heart was devoted to her, heart and soul, but which of all these truths (amidst the agony of her heart, when, as they sat together, awaiting the arrival of dinner at a roadside inn on the road, the sunset hour brought to her mind a picture she never again was to witness!—a picture of that little prey lead hurried to its innocent and early rest, with the white curtains drawn close round it to mellow the evening light, and herself bending tenderly, cautiously, silently above it, to print the gentle kiss, and breathe the whispered blessing of a mother's good night! It rose—it grew more and more distinct—that imagined scene; and as her head sank on her clasped and quivering hands, and the thought flashed through her brain that she never had kissed her child in parting, or waited for a sight of her familiar face, and he checked by harsh and angry voices, Henry Marchmont's presence, and Henry Marchmont's curses, had no power to check the bitter exclamation—"My child! my forsaken child!"

Years passed away—five years, whose comparative happiness the reader will readily commissioned to purchase, and the curiosity and surprise visible in the man's countenance reminded her of the necessity of appearing composed. She had no mother—no sister—no virtuous and sympathizing friend, to whom she could unburthen her grief; to whom she could say—"Feel for me, for I have sinned and suffered!" Her own pride, (alas! even pride) forbade her to seek sympathy. She sought, as in an almost inaudible voice she demanded the number to proceed, and the gentleman, who had evidently been



THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

A MAMMOTH PAPER.

DEVOTED TO MORALITY, PURE LITERATURE, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS, AGRICULTURE, SCIENCE, ART AND AMUSEMENT.

☞ This Paper contains from one-fourth to one half more than the generality of Two Dollar City Weeklies. ☜

THE PROPRIETORS OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST would respectfully call the attention of the public to their long established paper. The POST is now a paper of the very largest size; only one other paper in the country being, it is believed, of equal dimensions. It is nearly entirely filled with carefully chosen Original and Selected Tales, Sketches, Moral Essays, Biographies, Scientific Notices, Agricultural Information, News, Editorial Remarks, and Miscellaneous Matter of all kinds calculated to instruct and amuse.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

J. BAYARD TAYLOR and GRACE GREENWOOD are regular Correspondents of the POST.—The letters of the former are beauti ully written; while those of the latter are universally allowed, by the best judges, to be equal in wit, sprightliness, and general intellectual force and vigor, to the best productions in a line in which gifted women are apt to excel.

T. S. ARTHUR and other writers of merit, are also engaged as regular contributors. We have now a thrilling story, or rather Novellette, on hand from Mr. Arthur, which we expect to publish before many months, called "THE CHILD STEALER." Another Story, called "HENRY BENSON, OR THE EVENTS OF TWENTY-FOUR HOURS," by R. PHIPPS, Esq., is also waiting a favorable opportunity. Mrs. ANN S. STEPHENS likewise has a Story in hand for the readers of the POST.

PORTRAITS AND PICTURES.

In addition to the vast store of reading matter, we give nearly every week one or more PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED MEN, or Pictures of an interesting character. In the course of the last year, we have given Portraits of Lamartine, Ledru Rollin, Dupont de l'Eure, Odillon Barrot, Cavaignac, Thiers, Guizot, Arago, Gen. Greene, Gen. Twiggs, Gen. Knox, Mitchell, (the Irish Patriot,) Smith O'Brien, T. F. Meagher, Louis Blanc, Capt. Marryat, late Archbishop of Paris, Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, Archduke John of Germany, the President of Sicily, &c., &c., &c.; besides numerous attractive Pictures of various descriptions.

NEWS, THE MARKETS, &c.

We shall always endeavor to lay the latest News before our readers. Our BANK NOTE LIST is corrected weekly, and a full and accurate account of the MARKETS, SALES OF STOCKS, &c., also weekly given. These Departments are made up from the most reliable sources.

A MORAL PAPER.

We shall be especially careful to maintain for the POST an unblemished name; so that parents may safely and confidently put it into the hands of the younger members of their households—while, in the Editorial columns, we shall ever war, as heretofore, with the immoral publications of the day.

NEUTRALITY.

The POST is neutral in Politics, and free from all sectarian bias in religion. But it does not interpret neutrality to mean deadness; knowing that sensible readers would rather run the risk of having their "corns" trodden on occasionally, than that their weekly visitor should fail in spirit, liveliness and mental vigor.

FINALLY.

The POST is determined to keep the lead it has taken in the Newspaper world. It has the advantage of possessing the largest kind of a Subscription List, of the best quality, and it will not be surpassed by any rival. Whatever others may promise, the POST will be outstripped when it comes to performance.

TERMS.

The terms to single subscribers are $2.00 per annum, in advance; $2.50, if not paid in advance.—For $5.00 in advance, one copy will be sent 3 years.

TERMS TO CLUBS.

In order to accommodate the large number who wish to take a first class paper, but mistakingly think they cannot afford it, we continue the following low terms for Clubs—to be sent, in the city, to one address; and, in the country, to one Post Office:

4 COPIES,	- - - - - -	$5.00 "
8 "	(And one to Agent, or the getter up of the club)	$10.00 "
12 "	(And one to Agent, or the getter up of the club)	$15.00 "
20 "	(And to Agent, or the getter up of the club)	$20.00 "

THREE COPIES of the Saturday Evening Post, and ONE of either Graham's Magazine, Godey's Lady's Book or Sartain's Union Magazine for SIX DOLLARS.

THREE COPIES of the Saturday Evening Post, and TWO of the Ladies Garland for FIVE DOLLARS

TWO COPIES of the Saturday Evening Post, and TWO of the Fountain, (containing 252 pages of original letter press, and 8 of Sartain's best Magazine engravings,) for FOUR DOLLARS.

A PREMIUM.

The Post Office of any town in the Union, from which we shall receive the greatest number of subscribers to the Saturday Evening Post, during the year ending on the 1st of November, 1849, (the papers to be mailed to such Post Office, or to subscribers through it,) shall be entitled to a continuance of the whole number of the subscriptions gratuitously, for one year after the expiration of the year for which these subscriptions shall have been paid.

The papers will be continued on, either to the subscribers themselves or to the agents through whom we may receive the orders for quantities, and to whom the package or packages may be directed, or to both, if there should be both in the same town, as the case may be.

Saison, Ohio, took the premium last year, with only 120 subscribers.

ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

The Money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk—(When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.) Address,

DEACON & PETERSON, NO. 98 SOUTH THIRD STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

☞ Editors copying the above, or who will give a fair notice of the paper, and insert our list of terms, in their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange. Such as are already entitled to an exchange for the current year, shall receive our thanks.

N. B.—Any person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, post paid.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE SATURDAY POST.—We have to congratulate our friends Edmund Deacon & Henry Peterson, upon the elegant appearance of their enlarged paper, which is now the very pearl of the literary weeklies. The literary reputation of the Saturday Post is widely known; and its circulation has been steadily increasing. It has the sincerest good wishes for its success, for we think it has done much towards correcting the taste of the newspaper reading public.—Phila. North American and United States Gazette.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST is now the best paper of the kind that came under our observation.—Franklin Democrat, Greenfield, Mass.

WE HAVE always considered the Post as one of the best of papers, filled with good reading, and not the trash with which a number of the city papers abound.—Chester Telegraph.

THE editorial and selected articles of the Post are generally those MOST worth reading of any other paper. Of our readers we, the best general weekly in the country, we say subscribe for the Post.—Spirit of Democracy.

THE POST may justly be called the handsomest, best and cheapest paper in the United States.—Niagara Sentinel.

ONE of the regular excellences of this paper consists in the high moral tone running through its editorials and selections, which make it a valuable family companion.—Centre Democrat.

THE POST always ranked among the best family newspapers of the country, and now that it is conducted by the longest and most handsome, will soon take the lead of its contemporaries.—Reading (Pa.) Gazette.

THE POST is one of the few literary papers of the day, in the columns of which discrimination is made as to the moral character and tendency of the literary matter published.—Alleghany County Advocate.

Varieties.

A CERTAIN boat—Two persons, travellers, met in a tavern, not far from this borough, the other night, to remain until the following morning.—During the evening they became quite sociable, told stories, laughed together, and were quite at home with one another. At last one of them related an adventure of his boyish days, when the other, after eyeing him sharply, jumped up from his chair, and, said he—

"Ain't your name Miller?"

"The very same," answered the other.

"Haven't you got the mark of a horse-bite on your right arm?"

"No!" thundered the other, in half a passion.

"Then—then," rushing up to him, "you are my man, long lost brother, whom we all thought dead."

Just at this moment, our horse being announced, we left.—Germantown Telegraph.

NATURAL ARITHMETIC.—It is an old saying, "that asses get their money like horses, and spend it like asses." A miser called on another to borrow twenty shillings of him; the moneyed man fell to telling it out in shillings, but the other took up a handful of silver, and said—

"Here, Jack, give me a couple of handfuls or so of it, and I'll give you a hat full when my ship's paid off."

GIVEN AWAY.—Said the old-est inhabitants and most influential citizen of the Green Briar region to the first Governor of Kentucky, "Won't you appoint Joe Breaks? the neighbors all want him to get it—they know what he can do—there isn't such another shot in the whole country." Judge Breaks' commission was forthwith made out.

☞ The Bedford Times states that at a recent horse-shoeing show in that town, the judges decided that a bundle of white carrots were the best performers in the shoeing way.

FRENCH WRITERS.—Melville, in his "Account of John King," says that "He was so active and vigorous a performer that he was like to drag the pulpit into blade, and fly out of it." Competent, a French writer, translating this passage, thus literally renders it

"Sonn heating himself by the fire of his passions and fathed, he beatin out himself like a machine; he broke his pulpit, and leaped into the midst of his auditors."

Another French writer, perceiving that when parliament was sitting the accounts in the newspapers of "Horrible Massacre," "Daring Robbery," and "Savage Assassins" were much less numerous than at other times, and not knowing that the long reports of the parliamentary proceedings left little room for other matter, arrived at the following philosophical conclusion:—"Such is the respect of the English for their parliament that when it is sitting crimes are extremely rare; but as soon as it rises the papers are filled with the most horrible atrocities."

THE BALL ARGUMENT.—This is the simplest of all contrivances, and in its very absence of complexity, it becomes a matter of wonder that it should so long have escaped the ingenuity of others of our kind of inventors. A gimlet is turned in the side, and a corresponding groove in the box, into which groove an iron ball, one or two steel balls, are contrived that one ball of the ball is always in the groove of the box, and the other ball at the groove of the axle—thus preventing the possibility of the wheel coming loose, and in a considerable degree reducing the friction. The box is perfectly air-tight, and contains a considerable quantity of oil, and the process of oiling the wheel when necessary is reduced to the very extreme of simplicity.

☞ A certain lodging house was very much infested by vermin—a gentleman who slept there one night, told the landlady in the morning, when she said, "Lo, sir, we haven't a single bug in the house." "No, ma'am," said he, "they're all together."

ALTHOUGH THE P... was before its enlargement the best family paper in our exchange list, and in fact the best one we know of, still we think it has been greatly improved. The dose of the paper cannot well be improved; its typographical appearance is good and bold. We have no hesitation in saying that the Post is decidedly the best and cheapest weekly paper published—Catholic Herald, N. Y. Messenger.

THE POST comes to us last week enlarged eight regular columns, and looking most splendid! There is no question but that it is the best family newspaper published in Philadelphia.—Northern Democrat, Manchester, Pa.

WE REPEAT the expression of our opinion that the Post is the best paper of its class in Philadelphia.—Free Democrat, Lititz, Pa.

SATURDAY EVENING POST.—This old and splendid weekly has recently been enlarged to the genuine mammoth size, has acquired strength and spirit in its editorial, and is now one of the largest and most good Weeklies ever issued in the United States, or the world. The amount and variety of talent employed on its columns, when we consider its extremely low price, is really surprising. The number for the present week is spicy with wit and sparkling with genius.—Toledo Sun.

SATURDAY EVENING POST.—Not the least interesting portion of this paper to us, is to be found in its editorials, which are always written with ability, a fearless truthfulness in regard to the right, and no inconsiderable share of the world's erring opinions, which such a mode well-balanced and true. The Post keeps a steady march in the van of literary enterprise, as we know—a success it well deserves from its own merits.—North American and United States Gazette.

AS A FAMILY journal, it is surpassed by none with which we are acquainted.—Independent Delaware.

United States SATURDAY POST.

HENRY PETERSON, EDITOR.

Philadelphia:

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1848.

REMOVAL.

Our subscribers will please take notice that we have removed the office of the Post, from No. 98 Chesnut Street, to No. 66 South Third Street, first house below the Girard Bank. Our office is in the second story, above that of the North American.

TO POSTMASTERS.

We trust our old friends, the Postmasters, will exert themselves and get up large clubs for the mammoth Post; or if they do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, that they will show our Prospectus to some other influential and responsible person who will be willing to do so. We think there need be no great difficulty in getting subscribers to the enlarged paper, as those who will take the trouble to compare it with the other weekly papers, cannot fail to perceive that it outshines all competition. Let it be remembered, also, that the postage is just the same on a first class paper, as on the meanest and poorest of the small reprints.

NOTICE.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post Office to be changed from, as well as the Post Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State as well as of the town in which they live.

Post Masters or others sending for a club, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address when they can do so conveniently. ks

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. J. T. Our thanks are due to J. J. T., and our friends at Rutland, N. Y., for the increased number of names they send on in their club. This winter we are bound to astonish our Newspaper brethren.

X. We regret that the great length of this article necessarily excludes it from our columns, as no extract from it could be made without entirely destroying its beauty.

REFLECTIONS OF A MELANCHOLY MAN. There are some fine thoughts in this poem, but the construction of the verse is very defective, and we must therefore decline it.

NOVEMBER. "Sallie's" piece will be published, and "Cousin Jerry" proved no prophet.

LEONATE. We think this story pretty well told, but we are afraid the incident on which it is founded is not quite humorous enough. It is a pretty good story to tell in conversation, but hardly good enough to put in print.

ADVENTURES OF A COMET TO THE MISLEADING RELIGION. If this is true, we will publish it with pleasure. Will the writer please inform us, if it is.

A LAD'S REPLY, &c. Yes—..., well done for a thing of the kind, but the "..." ...and is not to our taste.

TO LO... SARCH COMPANIES. This should appear in a daily paper, we think, to reach the individuals addressed.

DECLINED. "Farewell to Home," Poems by "Adolphus," "Poetry," "To Her I Love," and "An Accident" are respectfully declined. Most of these pieces have merit, but for shortcomings of various kinds, we are compelled to reject them. We may remark, in conclusion, that one of the most unpleasant things we have to do, is to decline the favors of his correspondents.

AN ERROR.

The name of J. G. Carleton, of Louisville, Ky., was some time ago announced in the Post as that of a delinquent subscriber. We are pleased to learn that this is a mistake, as Mr. Carleton had paid one of our agents who neglected to inform us of the fact. We regret very much that this mistake has occurred.

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

The Arabia arrived at Boston on the 19th, bringing Liverpool dates to the 4th inst.

It is gratifying to be able at length to announce to our Southern readers, that Cotton has advanced jd. over the last quotations.

Fair Orleans is quoted at 4¾; middling, 3¾; fair Upland and Mobile, 3¾; middling, 3¾. On the other hand, Breadstuffs have declined, prices being a shade lower.

The Cholera in England still maintains its mild character—the deaths in London being still under the average for the whole year. There have been five deaths since the last report, making one hundred and sixty-nine deaths since October, 4th, out of two hundred and ninety cases.

The trials of O'Brien and his fellow patriots—or "traitors," as the English papers have it—are not yet disposed of. A writ of error in O'Brien's case has been allowed, which was to be argued at once before the Court of Queen's Bench, in Dublin; from whence, if the decision there be unfavorable, it will be removed to the House of Lords, as was the law in regard to the Sidney prisoners in 1844. This throws another light over the whole matter. We should not now be surprised to see the case carried to the Peers, and the whole proceedings magnanimously quashed by the Lords spiritual and temporal. If this should be the result, we shall have a higher opinion than even that which we have long entertained, of the wisdom of the English nobility—unquestionably the ablest aristocracy on the face of the earth. The only institution which knows how to yield gracefully privileges which can no longer be retained, and to temper the severity of the law with the magnanimity of a masterly policy.

The great question, "Who shall be President?" absorbs now every other in France. The success of Louis Napoleon, it is said, is considered certain by his own party. It is probable, however, that neither candidate will have a majority of the whole number of votes, which the law requires. In that case the National Assembly will choose one of the three highest candidates.

Nothing certain yet from Vienna—except that Prince Windischgratz, at the last advices, was bombarding the city. The city has offered to capitulate on the following terms:—"A general amnesty, nomination of a popular ministry, and the removal of the troops from the vicinity of Vienna." When these terms are acceded to, it is added, the city will be given up, and the working classes, and even the Academical Legion, have not to be disarmed. But on terms will be accepted other than absolute submission. It appears probable that Vienna, after being battered to ruins, will be forced to submit. But, whatever may be the result, the end is not yet. The battle between King and subject once begun, must eventually result either in tyranny, or in the overthrow of the monarchy. And we shall be surprised if three years pass away, without the Emperor of Austria being either an exile, or a headless man. He may be worse than Louis XVI., but woe to that King, whose enemies are in his own Capital. They shall come upon him "like a thief in the night," and when he calls for help, there shall be none to heed him.

HYDROPHOBIA.

A lady of Camden, N. J., has been cured of an attack of that dreadful disease, Hydrophobia, by the administering of Chloroform. Dr. Jackson, her consulting physician, intends publishing a detailed account of the case. The patient was slightly bitten on the wrist by an unknown dog in August last, but no symptoms of the disease appeared until the 27th of October, when she was suddenly attacked sitting in her chair with her children around her. This was on the Friday. On the following Monday, Dr. Finley, her physician, says,—"I was proposed to administer the Chloroform more for the purpose of overcoming the severity of the spasms than with any expectation of its producing permanent relief. The inhaler was used at first, but we could do nothing with it, as she would bite severely everything within reach of the mouth. A concave piece of sponge was substituted, pouring the Chloroform in it, and then applying it to the mouth.

"The very first attempt acted beautifully. As soon as the spasm commenced, the sponge was applied, and in a minute almost, however wild and raving she may have been, she would sink down upon her pillow in a state of perfect calmness and repose, which was soon followed by a return of consciousness. So we continued to ward off the attacks, and on Tuesday, or Wednesday at farthest, there was no return of them. Still the very thought of water was horrible to her.

"She is now (Nov. 11) convalescent, though much enfeebled, but can drink water. She tells us she knows the same very unpleasant feelings were produced a day or two ago by her neighbor inadvertently washing her windows. I have no doubt of its being a case of genuine hydrophobia."

THE LAW.

Some New York lawyers recently made a calculation, showing that their aggregate self! cents were so small as not to furnish over $400 a year to at least one-third of the members of the profession. There are over nine hundred attorneys in New York, and it is believed two hundred of these do not earn $400 a year. Of course, in this calculation, the "glory" is counted at nothing. But it is for the "glory" of the profession, that perhaps nine out of ten embrace it. Practicing law, however, is, like everything else, a good business when you can get enough of it to do. But a man must have business in order to get it. In it as in everything else, we see the truth of the Scripture text: "To him that hath shall be given, but from him that hath not shall be taken away, even the little that he hath." Well is it for poor lawyers, as well as for other poor men, that another text is equally true, "Seed and ye shall find, knock and

THE QUESTION SETTLED.

There has been considerable said of late, in the English and American papers, relative to the ability of Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, one of the candidates for President of France. Inasmuch as Louis Napoleon has never manifested any remarkable talent or a practical man—except perhaps in the touching of an eagle to fly upon his shoulder, in order to astonish the people of France with an omen, the virtue of which consisted in the liking of the eagle in question for fresh meat,—and as the said Louis has lately shown that he possessed no talent as a public speaker, by an exhibition of stupidity in the tribune of the National Assembly, it has been nearly unanimously concluded by the press, that Louis Napoleon may be a very tolerable Louis, but that he is not by any means a Napoleon.

But, as Emerson says, "there is no opinion however firmly settled, that may not be overturned by the coming of a great thinker!" and the generally received opinion of Louis Napoleon, seems destined to meet with a sudden overthrow at the hands of Mr. N. P. Willis. The editor of the "Home Journal," in a late number of that paper, thus raises Louis Napoleon from the dust, and places him upon a high pinnacle of greatness. He says:

"It is enough to warrant Louis Napoleon for no common man that he has been, not many years, and when poor and hopeless of other distinction than that of his kinsman, the adopted friend of the brilliant D'Orsay, whose approval and pick of men is more exacting of endowments than of rank or fortune. As an intimate of Count D'Orsay, and a favorite and constant habitue of the difficult society which clusters around Lady Blessington, Louis Napoleon rarely was seen held his own with superior talents and culture. Gore House has been the home of his intimacy and exile, and with such sponsors as he has found there, he may confidently be believed in.

As it is well known that Mr. Willis also has been, in his time, "an intimate friend of the brilliant D'Orsay," and had some experience of "the difficult society which clusters around Lady Blessington," we hardly conceive that his testimony as to the probable merits of Louis Napoleon should be received with far more respect than that of others, who never have enjoyed such advantages. And we have no hesitation in expressing our opinion that, tried by this admirable test of Mr. Willis's, Louis Napoleon is not only a very superior man, but a greater statesman and warrior than even the "Iron Duke" himself.

Somewhat apropos to this subject, we perceive that a wicked Boston bard, not having the fear of the "brilliant D'Orsay," and the "difficult" Lady Blessington before his eyes, has dared to write in the following light and mocking manner of the author of the "Lady Jane." We can hardly credit the fellow's presumption:

"There is Willis, so natty and jaunty and gay,
Who says his best things in so light a way,
With concetts and jest phrases so thickly strewing
Our way,
That one hardly knows whether to thank him for saying
Anything
Over-estimated coins both power and pence,
Just concretes of a mine with a ring in her nose!
Thus he plays with his pen, just as it goes,
And enough of it, too, if he'd let it alone.
But he twitches and jerks so, one fully gets tired,
And is forced to forgive where he might have admired
Yet whenever it slips away free
It runs like a ... and Wildfire,
And ... with a musical music,
... thing with the liquidest sweep—
"Do not deep as a river, but wind leave a deep!
In a country where scenery's a stage is found
That has not its author sublime and profound,
For some one to be slightly about is a duty,
And Willis's shallowness makes half his beauty.

We are pleased to see that Mr. Willis meets this attack upon him as one who had been picked and approved by the brilliant D'Orsay, and admitted into the difficult society which clusters around Lady Blessington, might be expected to meet it. He says:

"Lowell, the poet, has written a satire full, at least, of gems of the very first quality, and with, here and there, a brilliant bit of true wit. He calls upon the literary Shetlandered with small money, and on he is a very sincere man and means what he says, the book is curious for showing how bitterly those who have not the fortune of a social education. Lowell's complete land of imagination pure and noble; has doubtless kept his genius for better more imaginative poetry than could be written by any other American; and as a satirist, we believe, he employs himself on the severer estimate of his contemporaries, and their true footing in the scale of the times. As a book to read aloud, however, and where a literate circle, we think this quite the best thing that has appeared in twenty years.

This is placing the matter on its right ground. Mr. Lowell, we would inform the reader, has resided all his life in the neighborhood of Boston, with the exception of short visits to New York, and a winter spent in Philadelphia. He may be, perhaps, acquainted with a number of the distinguished authors of the country, and with the works of the great world of literary celebrity, but of the fashionable world he has no means "a man of the world." Such a refined character, of course, is totally unfitted "for the society which clusters around Lady Blessington," and it is sheer folly in his friends to argue that he actually writes with all that accurate perception of faults and foibles which is generally supposed to distinguish a man of the world, for it is impossible that any man should do so, who has kept himself all his life "at the bottom of a well of seclusion," that is, never been "the intimate friend of the brilliant D'Orsay," or "the favorite and constant habitue of the difficult society which clusters around Lady Blessington."

FANATICISM.

We have not been for a long time so astonished as we were the other day at seeing an account of the principles of the "King Charles Club," at Oxford, England, an institution at which Club belonging to the University of Oxford, would be long in the Force's party of the Church of England. These principles go the whole length of the "divine right of kings," and the divine duty of submission of subjects. The following is a synopsis of them:—"The first declares the Queen to be the lawful sovereign, the second, the indissoluble union between Church and State. The third, that no right exists of private judgment in matters of religion. The fourth, that the education of the lower orders is a public evil. The fifth, that the lower orders should exercise no voice in the choice of representatives. The sixth, that persons having dependents are justified in exercising their influence over them in matters concerning the government of Church and State."

Here surely all these six declarations hang together, form and produce a consistent whole, links of a great chain of which one end is fastened to the Devil's footstool, while the other end these members of the "King Charles Club" would like to fasten round the great heart of the world. Two three other links, and the chain would be complete. Add, the city will be given up, and the working classes, and even the Academical Legion, have not to be disarmed. But on terms will be accepted other than absolute submission. It appears probable that Vienna, after being battered to ruins, will be forced to submit. But, whatever may be the result, the end is not yet. The battle between King and subject once begun, must eventually result either in tyranny, or in the overthrow of the monarchy. And we shall be surprised if three years pass away, without the Emperor of Austria being either an exile, or a headless man. He may be worse than Louis XVI., but woe to that King, whose enemies are in his own Capital. They shall come upon him "like a thief in the night," and when he calls for help, there shall be none to heed him.

HYDROPHOBIA.

A lady of Camden, N. J., has been cured of an attack of that dreadful disease, Hydrophobia, by the administering of Chloroform. Dr. Jackson, her consulting physician, intends publishing a detailed account of the case. The patient was slightly bitten on the wrist by an unknown dog in August last, but no symptoms of the disease appeared until the 27th of October, when she was suddenly attacked sitting in her chair with her children around her. This was on the Friday. On the following Monday, Dr. Finley, her physician, says,—"I was proposed to administer the Chloroform more for the purpose of overcoming the severity of the spasms than with any expectation of its producing permanent relief. The inhaler was used at first, but we could do nothing with it, as she would bite severely everything within reach of the mouth. A concave piece of sponge was substituted, pouring the Chloroform in it, and then applying it to the mouth.

"The very first attempt acted beautifully. As soon as the spasm commenced, the sponge was applied, and in a minute almost, however wild and raving she may have been, she would sink down upon her pillow in a state of perfect calmness and repose, which was soon followed by a return of consciousness. So we continued to ward off the attacks, and on Tuesday, or Wednesday at farthest, there was no return of them. Still the very thought of water was horrible to her.

"She is now (Nov. 11) convalescent, though much enfeebled, but can drink water. She tells us she knows the same very unpleasant feelings were produced a day or two ago by her neighbor inadvertently washing her windows. I have no doubt of its being a case of genuine hydrophobia."

THE LAW.

Some New York lawyers recently made a calculation, showing that their aggregate self! cents were so small as not to furnish over $400 a year to at least one-third of the members of the profession. There are over nine hundred attorneys in New York, and it is believed two hundred of these do not earn $400 a year. Of course, in this calculation, the "glory" is counted at nothing. But it is for the "glory" of the profession, that perhaps nine out of ten embrace it. Practicing law, however, is, like everything else, a good business when you can get enough of it to do. But a man must have business in order to get it. In it as in everything else, we see the truth of the Scripture text: "To him that hath shall be given, but from him that hath not shall be taken away, even the little that he hath." Well is it for poor lawyers, as well as for other poor men, that another text is equally true, "Seed and ye shall find, knock and

THE COMMUNITY SYSTEM.

All Community Systems, we believe, that have ever been tried, have failed, except such as were held together by a common religious, or rather sectarian faith. In these the government has been either patriarchal or despotic, and the community being thus made a huge machine, it has succeeded admirably so far as material prosperity was concerned. It is remarkable, however, that when men have banded together with material prosperity as the principal object of their union, they have, we believe, invariably separated in a short time, in confusion and discord.

But even the religious communities, such as Rapp's or those of the Shakers, have never truly succeeded. While their material prosperity has been great, their intellectual condition has been most barren. No life, no intelligence, no books or paintings, no love of science or art, no near discoveries are found in these successful religious communities,—intellectually they are as dead as a dry bench, and put forth no leaves or buds or fruit, to the glory of the great Giver of Life.

The reason of this is very evident. These communities only succeed by the sacrifice of the individuality of man's nature—only by reducing all their members, as far as possible, to one common standard. If they allowed individuals to think for themselves, they could not work in common harmoniously, and could not therefore prosper. Now it is this individuality of man's nature, this difference of one man from another, which is the fertile source of all intellectual and spiritual life. And in proportion to the degree of freedom of opinion and of action possessed by a nation, will be its intellectual vigor—manifested in great books, great inventions, great deeds and great men. The vast activity and enterprise of the American people, for instance, is a direct consequence of the air of freedom they breathe, which allows the peculiar faculty of each individual its fullest opportunity of exercise. To afford each man the fullest liberty in the exercise of his peculiar modes of thought and practice, and to receive this perfect freedom with perfect harmony and order, is the highest problem of the statesman. To allow each to be himself, and no other, within the wide circle of temperateness and morality, and yet to preserve these millions of human spheres from jarring, as they move each in its own orbit, is the perfection of human society and government.

But we have run off into an article, when we only intended a preface. An experiment at Marshal Bugeaud in the French possessions in Northern Africa, affords another illustration of the impossibility of Associations succeeding, even in a material point of view, which are not firmly bound together, and made amenable to discipline, by a common religious faith. The following is the Marshal's account, in a recent number of a French periodical, of the breaking up of his colonies:

"On returning from a prolonged expedition, I went to visit my three little colonies, beginning with that of Sidi Brahim, which I had left in September, 1843. Generally I was received with joy by the military colonists, who considered me as their benefactor, and called me their father. This time it was Sunday. I found them sad, and uneasy. They were leaning against their doors, and did not even take off their caps to me, according to their custom. I saw that their minds were unsettled. They were leaning against their doors, and did not even take off their caps to me, according to their custom. I saw that their minds were unsettled. They were leaning against their doors, and did not even take off their caps to me, according to their custom. I saw that their minds were unsettled.

"I went to the officer, and he being absent, I amused myself in the meanwhile in trying to inquire the causes of the disorganization, the symptoms of which I had remarked.

"'My men have good reason to be sad,' replied the sergeant; 'they are losing the best part of their harvest, and they attribute it to the labor in common; they are tired of this arrangement, and they are going to ask you to break up the association.'

"'But how do they lose their harvest? They reaped in the beginning of June, and we are now at the last of September; it ought to be in the granary long ago.'

"'Ah, Governor, Governor, it ought to be so, but they do not work, and we have not yet taken care of a third of the barley or wheat.' Depending on the natural productiveness of the weather, we do not take the precaution to take the sheaves from the rich perpendicularly, we look what formed the row from the whole adjoining square. The two storms which came lately have soaked our ricks, and our grain has sprouted.'

"I went to the rick and I saw the grain growing on all sides. I immediately assembled the colonists; they formed a circle about me, and we had the following conversation:

"'How is it, my friends, that having made your harvest in June, you have not threshed your grain at the end of September?'

"'Because,' they replied, 'we do not work.'

"'And why don't you work?'

"'Because we depend one on the other; one does not wish to do more than the other, and thus we put ourselves on the level of the idle. Do you not think, Governor, that if we each had our portion of this grain, it would have been threshed long ago? We should have already done more than double. Things would go on so, we beg you to break up our association.'

"'Yes, yes,' cried all the colonists, even the lazy ones.

"'We put ourselves on the level with the lazy ones,' said they. Thus affected, the two men to whom we have confided the care of the common labor, but I thought it my duty not to yield too soon. So I made an appeal to the sentiment of fraternity, of which I knew the lazy.

"'How, my friends,' replied I, 'you are all Christians; you all profess the religion of Christ, you selected each other voluntarily, you have formed a tribunal, you make, in some sort, only a family of brothers, and you are the first to violate the law of labor in common, without calculating whether one does more than another?'

"Confounded, they looked at each other, and notwithstanding that, there is no resolution to labor; it does not seem like working for one's self when we work in common. But it would be worse when we marry. Our wives would agree less than we do about work and everything else. It would be a hell. If we have children, they have produced more, in the one day's work more, which you allowed every man to have his himself, then in the five days of the association. Thus we not refuse to let to dissolve our association.

"I proceeded immediately to the verification of the work of the colonists, and I found that, in individual harvests, the officers could have no appreciement, and the sum total in fact as annual expenses for the year, and the sum total in fact as annual expenses for the year. The operation finished, I called the colonists together again. I declared to them that we should not dissolve the association, but that we should establish individual labor among them, but I warned them that since they thought themselves able to take care of themselves, if they expected clear questions of the inmates, separately, might lead to some satisfactory issue.

"It is hard to relate, after allowing it to be a case of abolition, the victuals has been conveyed from the city school, for her they who would scheme the interest of a house open day, or of public streets, would seem masters of any stratagem to hide their valley. The parents of Marietta are both of the Catholic persuasion, and she was voted for her modest demeanor, and her compassionate associates of other communions a like tribute of respect. Her daughter, a little girl of ten years of age, was in tears of infancy with any of the other sex, at home or elsewhere, and a rigid interlocutor, or a rude or unpleasant word, or even a frowning, shudder nothing to furnish plausible grounds for prompt action. Anything like an elopement has not taken place, and the parents are in a delicate position, and a weary remarkable for her intelligence, and of Blind attachment. True, an elopement is possible, and appearances are against it, and that there is a third party engagement of her late the sum of the parents, and the parents of the Very particular manner aforementioned, would seem to substantiate a good and doubt. To bring out the essential of a public nature, and to do justice to the parents, if it be possible, I, in the capacity of a commended the a reward be offered at once by the Mayor,—and, this successful, we have one more to add to the list of the Mayor's speeches, and the Mayor's speech will be made, and the Mayor's speech will be made, and the Mayor's speech will be made

United States SATURDAY POST.

Philadelphia:

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1848.

MR. HART'S ADDRESS. We have received a copy of the Address to the Literary Societies of Washington College, delivered last September, by John S. Hart, A. M., of this city. The subject of the Address is a comparison of the Past with the Present—in which the speaker shows that in all respects the present age is fully equal, if not superior to the past ages. Mr. Hart contrasts Alexander, Cæsar, Themistocles, Aristides, with Napoleon, Cromwell and Washington, and shows conclusively that the greatest of the ancients have their counterparts and equals among the moderns. Speaking of the injustice and violence of our present party politics, Mr. Hart says:

"Here, again, let us not be deceived by the apparent bulk of a present evil, or a false perspective in regard to those of former times. Before uttering a sweeping condemnation of our contemporaries, let us look for a moment at some of the facts of the case. A candidate for public office, it is said, is sure to be abused and misrepresented, whatever may be the purity of his motives, whatever the uprightness of his life. What man was ever more maligned than George Washington? Who ever used harder words than Martin Luther. What controversial of modern times ever approached, in vulgar abuse, the philosophic author of Utopia, the sublime the learned, the witty Sir Thomas More? What are the Phillipics of Demosthenes but splendid tirades of abuse? What are the Cataline orations of Cicero, but the greatest personalities, outstripping in violence even a modern electioneering speech? What is Sallust's immortal history of the Cataline conspiracy, but an eloquent partisan tract, a political pamphlet, about as reliable for the veracity of history as the biting sarcasms of Junius?"

Mr. Hart concludes as follows:

"If fifteen years of a not unstudious life, occupied almost exclusively with ancient learning, might be disposed to give any indication of taste for the pursuit, or of application of the subject, the mind so educated may be presumed to have a bias, rather favorable than otherwise, to the men and things of classical times. I yield to no one in reverence of what is great or good, whenever or wherever found. But, on the other hand, I have no patience with those who are ready to decry, without examination, whatever is new, whatever is American. I do verily believe that the present times are the best times; that physically, mentally, and morally the race is in a better condition in the year 1848, than in any one of the 1847 years that preceded it, that the aggregate amount of human knowledge, happiness and goodness is greater than it ever was before; that the race, so far from being retrograde, is moving both onward and upward—aye, and sooner, too, and that, of the eight hundred millions who are said to inhabit this globe, more than a third will to be found twenty millions containing the same average amount of intelligence, comfort, health, morals and refinement, as the twenty millions who call themselves 'The people of the United States of America.'"

THE UNION MAGAZINE. The December number of the Union is embellished with a pretty engraving called "The Spirit of the Flower," one that will please the boys, or "The Bird Trap," and a Fashion Plate. The contributors are Mrs. Dorr, T. S. Arthur, Mrs. Eames, Miss Brown, Mrs. Dana, Miss Lynch, Mrs. Embury, &c., &c. The editor, Mrs. Kirkland, continues her "Sight Seeing in Europe;" and Mrs. Osgood has a fragment from an unpublished poem on Woman, from which we make the following extract—it will be perceived that Mrs. Osgood is not a very ultra "Woman's rights" woman.

I proud feel that the shares each sweet task
Tell the reformers know not what they ask
I only seek for our transgressed lay,
That she may have a fair and equal chance
Woman man—no—not her equal, nor
I would not see in moral character
A blossoming cactus up some giant stalk
Some human man—no—but yet the human half—
Ah! cast your eyes—and set the answer off!
Not would I bid her get her Brodery frame
A fancy blacksmith by the forge a flame
No! be her form she kindles only above
With wheels man's iron nature wear glove
Strike where the iron's hot, "with all your art,
But strike Love's metal in his yielding heart!
Not should our ralph her sister's law administer
A nothing maiden "with a mind to her
Or challenge awful Webster to the floor
Like that rash wight who raised the cobbler's hill
And set a genius free the moment had
Not thus forego the poetry of life
The sacred names of mother, sister, wife!
Not not the household hearth of all its grace
Lose not those tones of musical delight
All man has left, to hear, or see, or meet
Of his commissioned home—beyond the night.
Yet men too proudly use their royal power,
They chill the soft bloom of the lovely flower,
They bind the wings of the gay bird of song
In search of power are and halve love
They bind the heart that fondly pleads to wrong
In plaintive prayer—in unpassioned song.
Smile on, ye sneers! Scorn—sneer on, enthusiast
Wing!
Some she not to ask but for one cooling drop
Since but one want distinct the gay sister
Way in the desert drying lower—stop

THE WESTERN MONTHLY. A correspondent remarking another column for the Western monthly Literature takes much pains to show that the articles, information for the Eastern and other readers are in the West. Editorial Editor Mr. Hall who design inaugurating in the West, Indeed Foreign editorial department. By Lida Shaughnessy, a Western author, Philadelphia: E. H. Allen & Co. This work emphatically belongs to that comparatively small number, which have been justly termed "books that are books." While, in one sense, it does not come up to the promise of its long title, in another sense, it goes far beyond it. While it contains hints and anecdotes by which Western and Eastern merchants, as well as emigrants, may be instructed, no labored effort is made to this end, as the title would seem to imply. The book is simply the biography of a Western merchant, who calls himself Luke Shortfield; and we think that the hero is telling his story, has set down very little that did not actually occur. The chief of the book, and that which makes it really and truly a book, and not a mere attempt at book-making—is nine-tenths of what purport to be books are—is the evident truthfulness and naturalness with which new scenes and characters are described. The Western merchant, and the Western country, are pictured by the reader evidently as they are. There is no attempt at fine writing, which disfigures so large a portion of American literature, but the author delineates "a plain, unvarnished tale." The history of nearly every man's life would be interesting, told in truth and fulness and simplicity—but the instant that the teller begins to add artificial charms to his narrative, the real charm departs forever.

In conclusion, we recommend this work to the business community both East and West, in an especial manner. Merchants will enjoy this simple record of a merchant's life. Literary men also, however, would do well to peruse it, for it will strengthen them in the conviction that there is in exclusive beauty in truth, simplicity and natural scenes. High wrought fustian and extravagant declamation may live in hysterics for their brief hour, but the literature that endures, is the simple and the natural—that which is kindred to the eternal emotions and the day, not that which is addressed to fits and manias, to being a constant whirlwind and a perpetual storm.

TWENTY YEARS SINCE; OR, THE RUSSIAN FAMILY. By G. P. R. James, Esq., author of "Arabella Stuart" &c. New York: Harper & Brothers. Another volume by the indefatigable James. We wonder if there is any one person in the world who faithfully reads all Mr. James's new novels as they appear. We think we hear one faint voice reply to this question, "I don't do anything else." Looking at the opening of the present volume, we perceive that our author has put his "well-made youth, of elegant form and bearing, with firm, graceful, and yet powerful limbs, and a fresh and clear complexion," into a "Sunday-book," instead of on the "powerful steed," where he is usually located. This we consider quite "come down," though perhaps intended to be in accordance with modern civilization. A little further on, Mr. James informs his "enlightened readers," (probably a very large proportion of them,) that "the sun rises, in the end of August, a few minutes before seven before in the morning." For which amazing piece of information, they undoubtedly will be very grateful. We do not make these remarks to depreciate Mr. James, however, for considering the number of books he tells it incumbent upon him to write yearly, we consider his performance extraordinary. For sale by Leonard & Robinson, Philadelphia.

GOING TO HEALTH AND LIVE LIFE. By N. J. Calkoswell, M. D. This volume professes to teach what to eat, what to drink, and what to avoid; what exercise to take, how to control the passions and appetites, &c., so that health may be secured and a happy and comfortable old age attained. This is all very good, and yet it is in general lack one thing more than all this, and that is the will to do the right, after they are perfectly convinced what the right is. For sale by G. B. Zieber, Agent, Philadelphia.

WEBSTER'S SCHOOL COMPANION. By W. C. Webster. New York: S. Raynor. A choice collection of music, arranged to be easy by one, two, three and four voices, with a most complete thorough system of elementary instruction. Designed for public schools, academies, and select juvenile and adult classes. For sale by Messrs. Daniels & Smith, Phila.

TWO THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS. Harpers' beautiful serial edition of this work is now com-

LADIES' NATIONAL MAGAZINE. The National for December contains an engraving of "The Belle of the Fancy Ball," one of a "Lake Scene among the Adirondack Mountains," and a Fashion Plate. The contributions are "The Belle of the Fancy Ball," by Ellen Ashton, "The Cheerful Heart," by A. J. W., "The Dress Maker's Apprentice," by Caroline Orne, "Advertising for a Wife," by Harry Sunderland, &c., "Lost and Found," by Mrs. Stephens, is concluded. The following due poem is by an other correspondent of the Post.

THE HEART'S APOSTLES.
BY HENRY MORFORD.

Not through the Bishops of Eternal Rome
Wearing the purple in the Vatican,
Not through cathedral aisles and vaulty tome
Has the bright lamp of faith come down to man:
Not through the great Reformers, who so long
Their fiery tongues have thundered in the hall;
Oh! not through one of all this mighty throng
Has flowed the best religion of the world.
But in the gentle heart of woman kind,
Through the long ages has the truth been brought,
Thus Kindness has the world's rough heart refined.
Their words to mercy moulded human thought,
In the fond soul of woman alone dwelt
Has the eternal truth been taught to best
Since the first Mary stood at the Saviour feet
And Martha's cares worldly-perplexed at his feet.
Most faithful of the ministers of God,
Types of the angels as their shapes we dream,
Sources of mercy in the earth abroad,
The best apostles are the faith supreme;
Still keep, oh! woman, that most glorious crown,
Teach back to man his long forgotten power,
And when our spirits rise to star-crowned Sun and Sick
Point to the Heaven above and win us there!

PAUL ARDENHEIM, THE MOOR OF WEIMAR. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson. We have received from the publisher the first volume of a new romance by George Lippard—containing only 96 pages. As we are bound by our past controversy with and rebuke of Mr. Lippard, to be very fair towards him, we must defer our criticism of his book until we have had time to examine whether there is less thunder and lightning in its style, and less individual heat and fire in its characters and scenes, than have usually marked his romances.

French Assembly.

THE MEN OF FRANCE.

A Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser gives the following animated account of some of the marked men of the French National Assembly:

There is Napoleon Bonaparte with face so like the pictures of his uncle, sitting half way up upon the right; and there, again, marching up the front, with heavy, cautious step, and honest, ruddy, strongly marked face, is the lazy Morbeau of the time-gone by, Napoleon.

A man, thirty set man, with round shoulders, short neck, black moustache and grey hairy hair, has now taken his seat under the canopy and rang his bell. He is laughing and chatting gaily with half a dozen who are gathered round him; it is the author of "Les Guêpes," and of the "Journal de Madame," the President of the Assembly—the voluptuous Marrast.

At the end of the seat near by, a military looking man, in blue coat and white heavy collar, has received his seat. Cavaignac, in a quiet manner has been so quiet, you would not have observed him except for the crowd that now grouns around him. You see the heavy head of Rochejacquelin in the company, and can see by the movement of his lips, that he is addressing the military man in the corner. The replies seem to be earnest, though quiet, and you catch glimpses of an occasional gesture of the hand, which is more like a coiler English, than a lively French gesture.

And who is the man in the corner? Le General Cavaignac.

A tall man, with silver gray hair, in close buttoned frock-coat, and with dignified carriage, now walks in and places himself quietly in a low seat on the left, immediately the whisper circulates in the gallery, "Le Lamartine." While they are watching, he leaps over to have a word with his neighbor. The neighbor is stout, has gray hair, and a firm, honest, countryman's look. And who is it that gives Lamartine so cordially, and seems from the sparkle of his eye and honest countenance? It is Arago, the philosopher.

The house is now nearly full. Twice the President has rung his bell, and twice the ushers have ordered the loitering representatives to their seats. The President, quietly in session, is adopt-ing, but in such noise as conversation and laughter that you can hear no word of the proceedings.

"Tiens!" "Tiens!" goes round the gallery. And a little, sleek, gray-headed man, in brown breeches, long waist, and a star upon his left breast, walks up the hall, nodding to this one, and shaking hands with that one, and smiling about him, till at length he is in his place, his head leaning on his hand, and the debate is about to commence.

Two or three are in waiting at the foot of the tribune, and keep appearingly in their turn toward the President. At length one mounts, and leaning over the tribune, attempts to make his voice heard above the hum of conversation, and chatting seats in the hall. But it is in a dull speaker, or an unknown speaker, or an unpopular speaker, or the topic be unimportant, the attempt will be utterly vain. In come the very, happy-looking Marrast as if just on a novel or authority, in who the hum of conversation, and the hum of the bees in the hall, the President rises his eyebrows, shrugs his shoulders, taps his bell again, and closes the vote.

A moment after and the Assembly is itself again—the same noisy, bustling, stirring, to-then, exerting body of France. As it goes on, throbbing still, within its stone walls, and within its world-called gates, upon the banks of the Seine.

NOTICE. NEW.—A new kind of Life Preserver has been brought forward in New York, the invention of which claim for it the following advantages:

"A person wanting one of these life preservers can carry from fifty to one hundred lbs. in addition to their person, and float four persons in the water, without sinking, and not take the other persons out of the water, except with the load and of sailors can freely above the water.

"The entire person, save the face, is enclosed by an Indian rubber dress, parts of which are inflated, enabling the wearer to float in a erect, or sleep in a recumbent position. On with pellies which are attached, propel himself at the rate of three miles per hour. His person is kept entirely dry, and the heat of his body so retained, that he is warm and comfortable, when floating on the water in cold weather."

☞ In the list of 917 voters in the town of Hingham, Mass., there are only 220 different names. There are 53 Hersays, 43 Cushings, 18

General News.

A PILL MACHINE.—A pill machine is exhibited—a wonderful little catch, roll and snap apparatus. It can grind out pills by the hundred, and as a gentleman observed, it was just the thing for our people. The dough for the pills is fed into a hopper and it is then cut into pill form by a small revolving wheel with its periphery full of moulds which drops them as it revolves, and they are then rubbed and dusted over with pill dust and fitted for the boiling operation. A couple of grooved rollers to feed in the dough, cutting it off at pill distances would form the pill faster, but taking this machine for all in all, it is unique.—Scientific American.

THE CHOLERAS.—The Asiatic Cholera proves by dissection, the Medical Examiner says, to be the inflammation and ulceration of the various membranes of the bowels. The contents of the stomach and intestines ferment and putrify, vomiting, and swelling of the abdomen quickly follow, and the patient sinks. Dr. Maxwell, of Calcutta, says he cured himself by copious drafts of effervescent soda powders in cold water; that he afterwards saved many a life by the same treatment. He says that no remedy will avail except relieving the bowels of the fermenting contents, and if this be not done gently, it will be fatal.

DEAFNESS.—James Yearsley, an English surgeon, has discovered, according to the Medical Examiner, a curious and efficient mode of relief for deafness resulting from scarlet fever, &c., in cases where the drum of the ear has been broken. It is simply to moisten a small pellet of raw cotton, and gently push it down the passage of the ear till it reaches the drum at the bottom; adjusting it till it produces the best hearing. This adjusting is necessary, else it may make the deafness at first only greater. Moisture is indispensable. The cotton should be changed every morning.—Many other cases are cited in proof.

RUTA BAGAS.—Some now, and we have really never found the turnips fully equal to the Ruta Bags is pretty generally taking the place of the Mangel Wurtzel and Sugar Beet. Several farmers inform us that they prefer it to the beet, and that is about all the satisfaction we have received.—We remember, however, that the same is, that while the Ruta Bags is raised with less risk and no more expense and is equally productive, it is wholesomer food for stock, that is, it is not of so intensive a nature as the beet, which generally causes cattle to scour to a dangerous degree.—Cleveland Herald.

A NICE POINT.—The Law Reporter for this month goes against a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, wherein the Court held that a bond, executed and delivered on Sunday, was void, because contrary to the statute which prohibits the doing of any labor or business, except in cases of necessity or mercy, on the Lord's Day. The writer says if this decision is correct, the contract of marriage, which is neither a work of necessity or charity in all cases, if performed on the Sabbath, is void, and the issue of such marriage consequently illegitimate.

THE WIDOW OF NOAH.—The Duc de Bordeaux, who is the lineal heir in the direct line of the Bourbons, to the French throne—but that has vanished away—announces that he will not be a candidate for the Presidency, that if ever the French people call him he will be King of France, or nothing. He has not learned that it is not his wife that of thirty-five thousand Frenchmen which will decide these little matters. But the sons of Kings, and Bourbons in particular, never forget anything or learn anything.

CANADIAN MONEY.—A person in England, lately managing among his family documents, found written on the back of an old bond some words indicating that a pot of gold was buried in a certain place in the garden. It was at first regarded as a hoax, but on digging up the spot, an iron pot came to light containing 10,000 guineas, and a scrap of parchment, much decayed, on which was written "To Devil shall have it sooner than Cromwell."

ASTOR'S PERSONAL PROPERTY.—The personal property of the late John Jacob Astor, according to a paragraph in the Globe, is ascertained to amount to the immense sum of four millions and ninety-three thousand dollars! This is exclusive of the houses, lands, &c., constituting his real estate.

HIGH CHURCH AND LOW CHURCH.—The parish church of Whitby, England, is situated on an eminency, approachable only by a flight of 194 steps. A new church has just been opened for the benefit of the old, infirm and sickly, who could not climb the heights.

EXPENSIVE CURTSEYING.—At a late Court of Common Pleas at Zanesville, Mary McClelland recovered a verdict of $1,000 against John Vanderveer, for a breach of promise of marriage.

TRANSFORMED.—A person advertises in Philadelphia, for "a respectable woman, either a widow or an orphan, about the age of 30, to do the work of a small family of three persons."

BOARD OF HEALTH.—The number of deaths during the last week in this city was 146—adults 76, and children 70.

Clippings.

☞ General Bakersky has shot sixteen Hungarians in reality. His army wish to leave Pest.

☞ Complaining of adverse fortune, keeps fortune adverse. A happy disposition to improve opportunities, sooner or later, I believe, never fails of success.

☞ A Washington correspondent says that Mrs. Polk has come North, to buy furniture for a new mansion in Tennessee.

☞ "Pa," said a boy, "make one hundred weight, how many will make your wife wait?"

☞ The Duke of Wellington, now in his 80th year, was out on a shooting excursion, the other day, in Windsor Forest, with his Royal Highness, Prince Albert.—London Letter.

☞ Colonel Seguin says that the Mexicans offered $100 apiece for Colt's revolvers during the war; and this destructive arm is considered a great curiosity among them.

☞ The genuine adage that old birds are not caught into chaff, is sentimentally paraphrased by the assertion "experienced warblers are rarely made prisoners by the twaks of grain."

☞ Keys, the Baltimore Post Office robber, had the good sense to invest the fruits of his villany in real estate, and thus nearly the whole of the $11,000 taken from the mail was recovered in property. He retired from business only three weeks before his detection.

☞ Junius Smith has gone to the South for the purpose of propagating the tea plant. He expects to sell fifty cents per pound.

☞ A letter from Bermuda, dated the 10th of September, says that John Mitchel "is a poor, miserable, broken-hearted looking creature, and in wretched health. He is not cut to work with other convicts; indeed, he is not fit for it."

☞ The Queen Victoria having learned that a little child, three years of age, was saved from the wreck of the Ocean Monarch, and that no trace of its family could be discovered, has taken charge of, and intends to protect and educate it at her own expense.

☞ We find the following paragraph in one of our exchanges, which settles one of the great moral questions of the day:

"Sir Hare, in the September number of Stillman's Journal, says that Alquifine will explode, when mixed with sugar, as it probably was at the great New York fire."

☞ The "Mirror of Fashion" says, that waistcoats, after the fashion of Robespierre, namely, white and double breasted, are worn by male lappels, are greatly patronized, especially by the young republicans.

☞ Genius will never be neglected by the public without it neglects itself; it must not disdain the humble alliance of industry. How can it expect encouragement, unless its existence can be manifested by performance? The surest evidence of superior talent is, that it forces itself into notice in spite of adverse circumstances, that it makes a road where it finds none.

☞ Copper is boy completing his "Historical and Philosophical Account of Society in the Middle States," to appear in a form of octavo, which will show that there are two sides to the position that all the liberties and intelligence of the country came from New England.

☞ Madame Josephine Weiss, the directress of the Vincennes children, has invested $12,000 in Government stock.

☞ The bee constructer in Barnum's Museum, has died recently. He cost $1,200.

☞ Mar Johannan, who visited this country with the Rev. Mr. Perkins, some years since, has been excommunicated from the Nestorian Church for his adherence to the more evangelical form of Christianity, which he has adopted, since he became acquainted with the missionaries.

☞ Prescott has nearly completed his history of Philippe II.

☞ Mrs. Kirkland is busy upon a book of Sight Seeing in Europe.

☞ A bald boy was proudly told, a forty hence. A wild ball called out to the horse "For shame to let yourself be governed by a boy." "And why not," said the horse; "what honor would it be to me to throw a boy?"

☞ There has been lately established in Paris an office for the insurance of the lives of horses.

☞ It is stated that the segars smoked in the United States amount to $10,000,000 annually. This expense, great as it is, is incurred by boys and young men principally, and would support 50,000 of their number in the process of obtaining a liberal education, at $200 per annum.

☞ There can be nothing much more unpleasant to a lady than the accidental fall of a false tingler in the presence of her lover.

☞ The Jews are now admitted to the full enjoyment of all their rights in the Roman States.

☞ A Down-East paper spoke one day of the "illustrious Rufus Griswold." The next it corrected itself by saying for "illustrious" read "industrious." That's a mistake with a difference.

☞ A correspondent of the Lady's Newspaper says he has never been able to obtain a solution of the following enigma. Can any one assist him?

My first is the terror of indians on land,
My second the terror of sailors on water;
My whole has a warehouse of terrors on hand,
Which sailors don't fear, and which indians run after.

☞ The London Morning Post says that the recent revelations on the continent have caused such large quantities of diamonds to be sent to England, that it has become difficult to sell those jewels.

☞ The following is from an old correspondent, who desires an answer:

I am just two and two,
I am not I am old,
I am parent of numbers
That never were sold,
I am learned, unlearned,
A day, a week,
I am often sold dear,
Good for nothing when bought.

☞ We lately heard a lady say—speaking of a very eloquent political orator of the city of Philadelphia—"I have listened to him frequently through long addresses, and have never known him to be in want of a word except once, and then he used the right one."—Germantown Telegraph.

☞ It is now positively announced, without any equivocation, doubt or uncertainty, that Father Mathew is coming to this country, when he gets ready.

☞ Theodore Parker, in a late sermon, said that the grandfathers of many men, who now-a-days are studying heraldry to get at their patent of nobility, had not even a coat to their arms.

☞ In the list of letters, as published in Washington, there is one for "the handsomest gentleman in Washington." There have been several applicants for enquiries, but the clerks of the Post Office have been unable to decide to whom they shall deliver the letter, not yet having received from the Post Master General instructions as to what shall constitute the standard of beauty.

☞ Where non-resistance prevails, the cudgel has body's one just now. Pat Mr. Thompson's nephew.

☞ Observe the fine humanity of Shakspeare in that his enemies are all worthless villains. The cunning to attach value to self-praise, and malice to others—from those whom they are compelled to respect, they propitiate their own self-love by disparaging and lowering others.

☞ "I hate to hear people talk behind their back," as the robber said when the constable called and took them by the throat.

☞ The government of Ireland has always been a ticklish subject for English statesmen. A letter from Charles I. to the Duke of Ormondgiven in 1626, contains the following quaint passage:—"As for your Irish, I know not what to say. Ireland hangs the ninth egge, we have yet sitten upon, and having a thicke shell, we have not yet hatched it."

☞ There is quite a matrimonial epidemic at Poughkeepsie, New York, just now. In one church it is said, there is scarcely a marriageable couple left. We see it stated in an exchange also, that at a place called Adelaide, respectable females are in such demand in the marriage market, that when people get good servants, they are afraid to let them go to church or chapel, lest the result should be an engagement.

☞ Small debts, says Dr. Johnson, are like small shot; they are rattling on every side, and can scarcely be escaped without a wound; great debts are like a cannon, of loud noise, but at little danger.

☞ General Rapp was sale-de camp to Bonaparte. He once uttered a dark looking Corsican to his presence, and took care to hold the door open while he spoke and gesticulated. When questioned by Bonaparte why he did this, "because," replied Rapp, "I don't put much trust in your Corsicans." This blunt remark caused much amusement.

☞ Place a garden small upon a pane of glass, and it is drawing itself along, it will frequently produce sounds similar to those of musical glasses.

☞ It is not an easy thing to sell a paper, but it is one of the easiest in the world, to share a paper.

☞ The gracious custom of buying American reprints of British works, practiced at the Custom Houses in New Brunswick, (and probably other British colonies) has been abolished, and such reprints are now admitted at a duty of 20 per cent., which is the duty on British reprints.

☞ It is said that there is a writer in London so funny that he is forbidden by law to write any humorous article or even to crack a joke, because by so doing he has caused many unfortunate men to spill a vast deal of ink, laugh themselves and so forth. What is more, he appreciates his own fun, and so when he feels very funny, he is obliged to go out of town, to tell over his jokes and laugh it out all to himself. He has no relatives in this country.

☞ Glory has one of the properties of heaven—that it is with great difficulty communicated downward. The rank and file are bound to be satisfied, if they return from a war with all their pay and half their limbs.

☞ The Capital of Ohio is now in her sixty-first year, or rather it is now sixty-one years since the first white citizen moved into what is now that State.

☞ Horlick's comet was seen on Friday week, by an observer in Brooklyn, who describes it as "a large light, twelve or fifteen feet in length, about two feet wide, and in color resembling a faint gas light."

☞ A person offers a reward in the New York Journal of Commerce, for the recovery of a "square black lady's bonnet box, lost from the baggage car of the Philadelphia train." We hope the "square black lady" has found her box.

Yet know, which remained on board,
And many from over the sea,
Yet are so unacquainted with one,
Your courtesy is thinking to me.

OUR MAIL RECEIPTS.

Receipts for the Saturday Evening Post from the 16th to the 18th November.

J. McKeiry	50 00	Mary G. Lewis	1 00
J. Snider	1 00	J. N. Tucker	1 00
W. Bunn	1 00	W. Foster	1 00
N. Hoop	1 00	H. C. Dutton	2 00
I. P. Toole	2 00	Mrs. C. Cooper	2 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	Mrs. M. Cooper	2 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	T. B. Lindsay & Co.	10 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	T. B. Lindsay & Co.	10 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	T. B. Lindsay & Co.	10 00
J. Jones	2 00	C. N. Bullock	2 00
D. M. C. Jones	2 00	C. N. Bullock	2 00
		Jersey & Co.
A. J. Barnes	50 00	Mary G. Lewis	1 00
W. W. Parker	10 00	W. W. Foster	1 00
W. Bunn	1 00	W. W. Foster	1 00
J. L. James	5 00	Miss L. C. Dunn	2 00
D. D. Lockwood	1 00	Mrs. Ann A. W. Hart	2 00
J. W. Richards	1 00	R. N. J. Hammond	10 00
W. L. Ferguson	1 00	J. H. Wheeler, Jr.	1 00
J. Brown, Jr.	1 00	T. B. Lindsay & Co.	10 00
R. C. Burns & Co.	2 00	Mrs. E. N. Paul	2 00
		November 4.
C. W. James	10 00	Mrs. A. Scott	3 00
T. B. Peterson	4 00	Mrs. J. H. Wilson	1 00
W. W. Lessing	1 00	Mrs. M. Wilson	1 00
J. S. Roeder	10 00	W. Lewis	1 00
J. S. Roeder	10 00	Mrs. E. W. Mead	1 00
C. Daniels	1 00	W. P. Paul & Co.	15 00
Mai. H. Edmonds	2 00	S. M. H. Kane	10 00
J. Jackson	2 00	J. H. Wright	2 00
Jas. Johnston	5 00
		November 7.
R. T. King	2 00	J. Mon E. C. Lolley	2 00
J. C. Wilson	1 00	J. F. Will Slayer	2 00
W. Bunn	1 00	J. F. Will Slayer	2 00
Rachel C. Kimball	2 00	J. C. B. Smith, Jr.	2 00
J. J. Brown	1 00	G. M. Dallas & Co.	15 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	G. M. Dallas & Co.	15 00
Sarah H. Way	2 00	J. J. B. Fisher & Co.	10 00
		November 8.
J. Worthington	1 00	Mrs. E. McCall	2 00
W. McMillan	1 00	Charlotte Vedder	1 00
W. Bunn	1 00	Mrs. Ann Ellis	2 00
J. Dalzell	2 00	G. Ash Green	1 00
J. Dalzell	2 00	G. Ash Green	1 00
R. C. Reeves	2 00	W. W. Hickman	1 00
J. P. Bilyea	2 00	J. W. Baker	2 00
J. P. Bilyea	2 00	J. H. Lombert	1 00
Dr. Chamberlain	2 00	J. H. Lombert	1 00
Mr. E. Harmon	2 00	J. H. Lombert	1 00
S. Earp	2 00	G. W. Richards	2 00
J. B. Newman	2 00	C. Davis	2 00
J. B. Newman	2 00	J. P. Hammond & Co.	2 00
H. H. Nutter	2 00	J. Graham	2 00
J. Bryant	1 00	J. C. Hall	2 00
J. Bryant	1 00	J. M. Chowdoman	2 00
Miss M. J. King	1 00	J. P. Dalzell	2 00
		November 10.
Miss M. Prutzel	2 00	R. C. A. T. Wallace	5 00
J. M. Butler	2 00	J. C. Long	2 00
J. M. Butler	2 00	Miss H. C. Thomas	2 00
G. W. Tryon	2 00	Mrs. M. C. Thomas	2 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	Mrs. M. C. Thomas	2 00
J. Lee	2 00	E. S. W. D. Dennis	15 00
J. Lee	2 00	E. S. W. D. Dennis	15 00
J. R. Donohue	20 00	Mrs. J. S. March	2 00
J. Bryant	1 00	Mrs. J. S. March	2 00
		November 13.
Ira Pim	2 00	C. F. Bonnin	2 00
W. M. Bell	1 00	J. L. Bonnin	2 00
J. P. Morris & Co	2 00	W. H. W. Bond	2 00
J. P. Shoot	2 00	Miss A. M. Draper	2 00
J. P. Hoagan	2 00	Miss E. L. Draper	2 00
J. Shepherd	1 00	W. L. Hammond & Co	1 00
J. A. Ely	1 00	L. G. Greene	2 00
J. A. Ely	1 00	J. C. Hall & Co.	2 00
J. Holt	1 00	J. P. Lehon & Co.	1 00
		November 14.
E. J. Rider	1 37	G. T. Hubbard	23 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	W. A. Gardner	2 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	Mrs. E. H. Bacon	2 00
H. C. Lowder & Co	1 00	Miss J. S. Hutton	4 00
H. C. Lowder & Co	1 00	J. Bryant	1 00
J. Pulsopher	1 00	Miss M. C. Riley	2 00
Miss M. E. Cook	2 00	J. B. Carnicer	2 00
E. Angie	5 00	R. R. Carnicer	2 00
E. R. Hall & Co	2 00	J. C. Mallardey	2 00
		November 15.
W. L. Bowker	1 00	W. Raphael	2 00
J. Bryant	1 00	J. C. Long, Jr.	2 00
J. A. Boynton	1 00	J. T. Child	2 00
J. Bryant	1 00	J. Morrison	2 00
J. F. Passano	10 00	J. W. Hutchinson & Co	15 00
W. Yates, Jr.	2 00	A. D. Winslow, Jr.	2 00
J. H. Prince	2 00	Mrs. C. E. M. Reed	2 00
J. C. Reynolds	10 00	Miss K. P. Reily	2 00
J. R. Lamb	2 00	Miss A. E. Reed	2 00
J. Hutchinson	1 00	Miss S. E. Clark	2 00

ONE OF THE MOST REMARKABLE CURES EVER RECORDED.

Waldoboro', Maine, July 30, 1845.

Dear Sir: Having experienced great benefit from your invaluable medicine, I feel in my duty and pride to let the world know what it has done for me. Possessed of a strong constitution naturally, I had enjoyed perfect health previous to the spring of 1843, when I was troubled with a difficulty in my left side, attended with some desirable pain. Sometime in July I was violently seized with a cough which continued until 50; then I was confined to the house eight months, during which time I was very severe. If my memory has spoken of my cough which lasted two years, daily raised large quantities of disagreeable matter, sometimes mixed with blood. Sometimes I raised a quart of blood at a time. I consulted the 4 physicians, all of whom did their best to restore me, gave me up, said they could do no more for me; I must die; it was impossible for me to live but a short time. One of them said my lungs were gone. At this critical moment when eminent physicians had exhausted their skill, friends despaired of my life, my own hope of recovery at an end, I resorted to DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY. When I had taken one and a half bottles, those severe spells of coughing were mitigated. I continued taking the Balsam until spring 1844, when I ceased to bleed at the lungs, my health and strength improved so that I left the house, but was not able to work for a year. Now my health is good. I am able to do a day's work every day on my farm. JAMES COMERT.

Witness: THOMAS BENNER.

See Dr. Wistar's Treatise on Consumption, to be had of the agents, gratis.

None genuine, unless signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper.

CAUTION.—The original and only genuine WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY was introduced in the year 1836. For ten years it has proved more efficacious as a remedy for Consumption, Coughs, Influenza, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption in its incipient stages than any other medicine. In consequence of its unbounded popularity this article has been counterfeited, wishes to defraud—REMEMBER, the original and only genuine article is signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper. Original prepared by Wistar & Co. Philadelphia. Now prepared and sold wholesale and retail only by Seth W. Fowle, Boston, Mass., to whom all orders should be addressed, and for sale by his agents, Chas. Shafer, 420 Market st. Fredk. Brown, corner Fifth and Chestnut, and Geo. K. Smith & Co., 264 North Second street, Philadelphia.

ALMANAC.

Nov. 1848	SUN RISES	SUN SETS	MOON WATER	MOON'S PHASES
19 Sunday,	7 15	4 45	1 59
20 Monday,	7 15	4 45	2 45	D. H. M.
21 Tuesday,	7 16	4 44	3 32
22 Wednesday,	7 17	4 43	4 4
23 Thursday,	7 18	4 41	4 32	First 4 1 18
24 Friday,	7 19	4 41	6 22	Full 10 8 00
25 Saturday,	7 20	4 40	7 16	Last 17 2 17
				New 23 4 41

STATE OF THE THERMOMETER.

	9 o'clock	12 o'clock	3 o'clock
Nov. 12,	40	46	42
13,	38	44	42
14,	34	43	40
15,	43	50	50
16,	46	59	52
17,	45	48	48
18,	40	44	44

Married,

On the 15th inst. by Friende Ceremony, J. THOMAS HARRISON to REBECCA P. FREEMAN, both of this city.

On the 16th inst. by the Rev. Geo. Mortimer, Rector of St James' Parsonage, Perkiomen, Montgomery county, Wm. WOLBERT, of Spring Garden, to Miss Rosina, daughter of John Spangenberg, Esq. of Rising Sun Village, Manayunk (south).

On the 16th inst. by the Rev. John L. Grant, Mr. Cornelius DEY, of Philadelphia, to Miss Caroline C. Gouverneur, daughter of the late Dr. Wm. P. Dey, of Newburgh, N. Y.

On the 16th inst. by the Rev. Henry A. Boardman, D. D. Benjamin Wm. ALLEN, to Miss Ann Maria, daughter of the late John W. Peck, of this city.

On the 16th inst. by the Rev. Jas. Pyle, Mr. Saml. W. Pyle, to Miss Ann Eliza Stokes, both of the city of Philadelphia.

On the 16th inst. by the same, Wm. Thompson, to Miss Mary Collins, both of the city of Philadelphia.

On the 16th inst. by the same, Mr. Jas. Pyle, to Miss Elizabeth Stokes, both of the county of Philadelphia.

On the 16th inst. by the Rev. Jas. Kennedy, Andrew D. Hackett, to Mary P. daughter of Joseph S. Wilson, all of this city.

On the 16th inst. by the Rev

Selected Poetry.

THE MARRIAGE VOW.

"For better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish, till death us do part, according to God's Holy Ordinance; and thereunto I plight thee my troth."—Marriage Service of the Episcopal Church.

Speak it not lightly—'tis a holy thing,
A bond enduring through long distant years—
When joy over thine cheek is hovering,
Or when thine eye is wet with bitterest tears,
Recorded by an Angel's pen on high,
And must be questioned in Eternity.

Speak it not lightly—though the young and gay
Are thronging round thee now, with tones of mirth;
Let not the holy promise of to-day
Fade like the clouds that with the morn have birth;
But ever bright and sacred may it be
Stored in the treasure-cell of memory.

Life may not prove all sunshine—there will come
Dark hours for all! Oh! will ye, when the night
Of sorrow gathers thickly round your home,
Recall to mind, in time when calm and bright
Beamed the sure path ye trod, unscathed by care,
And deemed the future like the present—fair?

Even that now beam with health may yet grow dim,
And cheeks of rose forget their early glow;
Language and pain unsell each active limb,
And lay, peerlessness, some worshipped beauty low!
Then will ye gaze upon the altered brow,
And love as fondly, faithfully, as now?

Should fortune frown on your defenceless head,
Should storms o'ertake your bargue on life's dark sea;
Fierce tempests rend the sail or gaity spread,
When hope her syren strain sang joyfully—
Will ye look up, though clouds your sky o'ercast,
And say—"Repent we not we hide the blast?"

Age, with its silvery locks, comes stealing on,
And brings the tottering step, the furrowed cheek.
The eye from whence each instrom gleam hath gone,
And the pale lip, with accents low and weak:—
Will ye then think upon your life's gay prime,
And smiling, bid Love triumph over Time?

Speak it not lightly—oh, beware, beware!
'Tis no vain promise, no unmeaning word—
Lo! men and angels list the faith ye swear,
And by the High and Holy One 'tis heard:
Oh, then, kneel humbly at His altar now,
And pray for grace to keep your marriage vow.

Church Times.

Interesting Essay.

THE HOUSE AND ITS VARIETIES.

FROM CHAMBERS'S MINNEBOOK JOURNAL.

The dwellings of mankind possess one peculiarity unknown to those of any other order in the animated creation—namely, a boundless variety in their form, fashion and materials. All other creatures construct their dwellings on the assigned plan of their species, which appears to be as certain and limited as the rest of their instinct; one lion's den exactly resembles another, and the nest of every lark is the same; time and generations make no change on their architecture; the Alpine vulture still builds his eyry in the cleft of the rocky precipice in the very form described by Pliny; and petrified nests of swallows have been found in the ruins of Peiræ resembling in every straw those attached to our hamlet caves. Even such animals as display the greatest share of what may be designated the constructive instincts, act under the same law of perpetual uniformity. The tailor-bird never thinks of sewing another essey to the slender fabric of leaves and grass its active bill has suspended to the boughs of the African palm, nor the bee of giving an additional side to the unvarying six of his honey cells. But what immense dissimilarity prevails in the houses of mankind! Some have been gigantic edifices; for instance, the palace of Nadir Shah, in the ancient city of Delhi, which was paid to occupy a space of three square miles. Had his majesty's chamber been situated at one end of it, and his breakfast-room at the other, a morning walk out of doors must have been a superfluity. Some, again, have been specimens of lavish wealth and splendor; such as the celebrated golden house of Nero, in which neither wood nor stone was visible, the very walls and roof being overlaid with gold; and in the centre was an open court surrounding the Temple of Fortune, built of a species of talc or natural glass, which contemporary authors assure us was as clear as crystal and perfectly transparent.

What a contrast to these temples of despotic vanity is presented by the Hottentot dwellings of South Africa, which consist of a hut, or rather tent, formed of rush mats, stretched on a few rude poles, and easily packed upon the back of an ox at any moment the owner may find it expedient to change his locality! The palace of a negro monarch is formed by a circular fence of wattles and clay, enclosing a number of huts built of similar materials, thatched with palm leaves, and provided with doors too low for entrance, excepton the hands and knees. Each of the queens-consort is assigned one of these structures, by way of preventing quarrels; and in most cases it is expected the lady will build it for herself as soon as the marriage feast terminates. The dwellings of his courtiers and subjects in general resemble that of their sovereign; and an African capital may be erected in a week, and destroyed in an hour. The homes of our British ancestors, as described by the Roman writers, seem to have been little superior; and the celebrated exclamation of the valiant chief Caractacus, when, in his captivity, he beheld for the first time the wealth and magnificence of Rome, "How could you, who possess so much, envy me my comfortable hut in Britain?" powerfully corroborates their statements. Yet the same country now contains Windsor Castle, Eton Hall, Chatsworth, and innumerable mansions that are reckoned among the most splendid in Europe.

The domestic architecture of different times and nations is indeed strangely diversified according to climate, habits and civilization. When the Spanish invaders of South America first reached the banks of the Orinoco, they found them occupied for a considerable distance by a people whom they denominated "Tree Indians," from their custom of constructing a kind of hut or cage of wicker-work for their families on the thick and spreading branches of their native trees, in which they lived during the six months of tropical rain in complete insulation, to which their country was subject; having laid up a small stock of provisions during the dry season, and dropping down, when the weather permitted, by a rope of cotton-of their cotton-the cargo always manufactured below, in search of whatever the rainy season afforded. Almost at the opposite extremity of the world, the Icelander constructs his habitation with an outer wall of turf, about six feet thick and four high, enclosing its various divisions; on one side, generally facing the South, are three doors, painted red, which respectively open to the smithy, cow-house, and family residence. The latter consists of a long narrow passage with apartments on each side. Every chamber has a separate roof, and is lighted by a small pane of glass, or more commonly lake, four or five inches in diameter. Several families frequently inhabit the same house, and all their members find nightly rest in one apartment, which is also the general refectory. The citizens of Bantam, a town of Java, adopt a similar construction, but united in their Southern latitude. Each hut, or rather family group of huts, which are built somewhat in the African style, have a circle of cocoa-nut trees planted round them, with a strong bamboo fence outside, by which the inhabitants are completely separated from their neighbors; and the town at a distance resembles a forest.

Many of the houses in the capital of Borneo Proper, which is situated on a sort of estuary, are built on rafts moored to the shore, so as to rise and fall with the tide; and the Dyaks in the same island, hang up human skulls, by way of ornament, over the entrance of their dwellings. The houses of the Finlanders are usually constructed of fir-trees, rudely squared by the axe, and laid, with a thin layer of moss between, upon each other; the ends, instead of being cut off, are generally left projecting beyond the sides of the building, and have a most savage and slovenly appearance. The roof is also of fir, sometimes skinned red. The windows are frequently cut out with the axe after the sides of the house are raised.

The Kamtchadales have two kinds of habitations—one for winter and the other for summer. The winter habitations are sunk some feet under the ground; the walls are formed of trees laid over each other; the roof is made slanting, and covered with coarse grass or rushes. The exterior consists of two rooms, with a large lamp fed with train oil, and placed so as to warm both rooms, and at the same time to answer the purposes of cookery. Those houses are frequently large enough to contain two or three families, and fifty persons have been known to take up their abode in one of them. In that case, the dirt, smell, and soot issuing from the lamp are such as only a Kamtchadale could endure. The summer house is supported on pillars, which raise it to the height of twelve or thirteen feet from the ground. These posts support a platform made of rafters, and covered of with clay, which serves as a floor, whence the house ascends in the form of a cone, roofed with thatch. This apartment occupies the whole habitation, and here all the family eat and sleep. The object of this singular construction is to have a space sheltered from the sun and rain, yet open to the air, in which their fish may be hung up and dried. It is afforded by the rude colonnade which supports these structures, and in their ceilings the fish are attached. Such is the style of building practised at the North-East extremity of Asia; nor are the popular fashions of its Southern nations much in advance of this. The dwellings of their kings and satraps indeed exhibit a degree of magnitude and splendor for which nothing but the ruler's unlimited power over the inhabitants and resources of his country could account. This is more especially observable in the ancient palaces, whose vast ruins, new left in desert solitude, evince to the far-exploring traveller from Europe at once the former power and deep decline of the Asiatic monarchies. The palace of Chilminar in Persia, though long roofless, still stands a mighty monument of Eastern architecture. The walls are constructed of blocks of gray marble, apparently without cement; and a marble staircase, wide enough to admit ten horsemen riding abbreast, leads from the lower to the upper divisions. In the beforementioned palace of Delhi there are still to be seen the remains of a vast covered balcony, called the Hall of Justice, the walls of which were covered with pictures, representing groups of animals, fruit and flowers, entirely formed of stones of various colors, according to those of the objects represented; and in the central group was the figure of the artist, who executed the whole in the beginning of the seventeenth century, and was said to be a European. But the ordinary habitations of the East, which, like the usages of Eastern life, have remained the same for centuries, are but little indebted to comfort, and less to elegance. The well known division of the harem exists only in the mansions of the rich and powerful, which, at least, in Mohammedan countries, are generally constructed in the fashion introduced into Spain by the Moors of Granada, and still seen among the old houses of the peninsular towns—walls without windows to the street; a flat roof, and a small open court in the centre, into which all the apartments open and windows look.

It is curious to remark that the city of Bagdad, so splendid in the Arabian Nights and other tales of our childhood, at the present day consists of brick houses but one storey in height, and provided with a subterraneous flat in the form of cellars, to which the inhabitants retire in the extreme heat of summer. The subjects of the Birman Empire are obliged by their governments to employ nothing but wood and bamboo cane in the construction of their houses, in order that the burning of towns by the enemy (which appears to be of frequent occurrence) may be less felt by the public. The Siamese have their habitations supported on pillars of considerable height, their outgoings and incomings being facilitated by a ladder, which is drawn up when circumstances make it expedient to cut off the communication. Most of our readers are acquainted with the fact that great numbers of the Chinese reside in junks on their great rivers and canals, and whole generations are born, grow old, and die, floating on the water. But even in the great cities of China domestic accommodations are on the following average:—The dwelling is generally surrounded by a wall six or seven feet high; and within this enclosure a whole tribe of three generations, with all their respective wives and families, will frequently be found. One small room is made to serve for the individuals of each branch of the family, sleeping in different beds, divided only by mats hanging from the ceiling; and one common room is used for eating.

Arabia, however, affords specimens of the house kind which, though rarely in use among modern generations, have at least the advantage of singular durability—we allude to the rock-hewn habitations taken notice of by all European travellers. The famous city of Petra, in Arabia, has been the theme of admiration and astonishment to all the tourists of recent times; but another town apparently far more ancient, and of greater extent still, exists in the North of Afghanistan, and is known throughout the East by the name of Bameean. The city consists of a great number of apartments cut out of the solid rock. It is said that in many of these the walls are adorned with paintings which look still fresh after centuries of desertion and solitude; some of them are adorned with niches and carved work. There are supposed to be more than twelve thousand of such habitations in Bameean, the country of the Afghans abounds with them; but the native, who are mostly Mohammedans, entertain a superstitious prejudice against inhabiting such homes. They have old traditions which declare them to have been the first habitations of mankind; and that strange city is casually mentioned by some of the classic authors, yet by whom its rocky abodes were excavated, who were its inhabitants, or what their uses, all has passed from the recollection of the world, and exists only in fabulous or uncertain tales.

The ancient homes of the world were almost in every point dissimilar to those of modern nations; among the polished Greeks and Romans the houses of the more wealthier classes were constructed with a portico in front, which opened into a large apartment intended for the reception of visitors, with its roof sloping down in the centre, in which there was a large square opening for the rain to run into a cistern placed below for that purpose. Beyond this apartment were the rooms for family use—all the decorations of our walls with them took the form of marble; mosaic floors occupied the place of our Brussels carpets in classic estimation; and the most fashionable style for a dining room was the representation in stone of crumbs and fragments of a feast, and apartments so finished were appropriately designated "unswept halls." Not most it be forgotten that a Roman bed-room, though inlaid with colored marble, had rarely if ever, a window—a custom which appears rather to have originated in some mistaken idea that the efficiency of glass, which was comparatively well known in those ages, and seems to have been used for ornamental purposes—Pliny speaks of glassy chambers; and Cardinal Bianchini records that, in the middle of the seventeenth century, as some workmen were digging on the ruins on Mount Coelius, they found a room belonging to an antique dwelling-house; the walls of which were covered with plates of glass, some of them tinged with various colors, others of their own natural hue. In the early days of Rome, any attempt at splendor in building or decoration appears to have been very unpopular, and consequently the house in the reign of Augustus still exhibited in its construction a whole tribe of their predecessors, with all their respective wives and families, will frequently be found. One small room is made to serve for the individuals of each branch of the family, sleeping in different beds, divided only by mats hanging from the ceiling; and one common room is used for eating.

Arabia, however, affords specimens of the house kind which, though rarely in use among modern generations, have at least the advantage of singular durability—we allude to the rock-hewn habitations taken notice of by all European travellers. The famous city of Petra, in Arabia, has been the theme of admiration and astonishment to all the tourists of recent times; but another town apparently far more ancient, and of greater extent still, exists in the North of Afghanistan, and is known throughout the East by the name of Bameean. The city consists of a great number of apartments cut out of the solid rock. It is said that in many of these the walls are adorned with paintings which look still fresh after centuries of desertion and solitude; some of them are adorned with niches and carved work. There are supposed to be more than twelve thousand of such habitations in Bameean, the country of the Afghans abounds with them; but the native, who are mostly Mohammedans, entertain a superstitious prejudice against inhabiting such homes. They have old traditions which declare them to have been the first habitations of mankind; and that strange city is casually mentioned by some of the classic authors; yet by whom its rocky abodes were excavated, who were its inhabitants, or what their uses, all has passed from the recollection of the world, and exists only in fabulous or uncertain tales.

The ancient homes of the world were almost in every point dissimilar to those of modern nations; among the polished Greeks and Romans the houses of the more wealthier classes were constructed with a portico in front, which opened into a large apartment intended for the reception of visitors, with its roof sloping down in the centre, in which there was a large square opening for the rain to run into a cistern placed below for that purpose. Beyond this apartment were the rooms for family use—all the decorations of our walls with them took the form of marble; mosaic floors occupied the place of our Brussels carpets in classic estimation; and the most fashionable style for a dining room was the representation in stone of crumbs and fragments of a feast, and apartments so finished were appropriately designated "unswept halls." Not most it be forgotten that a Roman bed-room, though inlaid with colored marble, had rarely if ever, a window—a custom which appears rather to have originated in some mistaken idea that the efficiency of glass, which was comparatively well known in those ages, and seems to have been used for ornamental purposes—Pliny speaks of glassy chambers; and Cardinal Bianchini records that, in the middle of the seventeenth century, as some workmen were digging on the ruins on Mount Coelius, they found a room belonging to an antique dwelling-house; the walls of which were covered with plates of glass, some of them tinged with various colors, others of their own natural hue. In the early days of Rome, any attempt at splendor in building or decoration appears to have been very unpopular, and consequently the house in the reign of Augustus still exhibited in its construction a whole tribe of their predecessors, with all their respective wives and families, will frequently be found. One small room is made to serve for the individuals of each branch of the family, sleeping in different beds, divided only by mats hanging from the ceiling; and one common room is used for eating.

Arabia, however, affords specimens of the house kind which, though rarely in use among modern generations, have at least the advantage of singular durability—we allude to the rock-hewn habitations taken notice of by all European travellers. The famous city of Petra, in Arabia, has been the theme of admiration and astonishment to all the tourists of recent times; but another town apparently far more ancient, and of greater extent still, exists in the North of Afghanistan, and is known throughout the East by the name of Bameean. The city consists of a great number of apartments cut out of the solid rock. It is said that in many of these the walls are adorned with paintings which look still fresh after centuries of desertion and solitude; some of them are adorned with niches and carved work. There are supposed to be more than twelve thousand of such habitations in Bameean, the country of the Afghans abounds with them; but the native, who are mostly Mohammedans, entertain a superstitious prejudice against inhabiting such homes. They have old traditions which declare them to have been the first habitations of mankind; and that strange city is casually mentioned by some of the classic authors; yet by whom its rocky abodes were excavated, who were its inhabitants, or what their uses, all has passed from the recollection of the world, and exists only in fabulous or uncertain tales.

A Word to the Wise

RAISING THE WIND.

[The following, from a late number of the Lady's Book, is a well-timed exposure of a class of operations, by which the public lose money, and the proprietors of established periodicals are much injured. Every year we have a batch of announcements in the shape of flaming prospectuses of new magazines and newspapers, and every year hundreds of our country friends have cause to regret that they ever put faith in them. Any man with a not very scrupulous conscience, can make large promises, but the fulfillment of such promises is a very different matter. For our own part, we feel almost disposed to make no promises at all, but to trust entirely to doing what others say they will do.—Publishers Saturday Evening Post.]

"I must do something," said a shabby-genteel-looking individual, leaning back in his chair, and lifting his eyes to the ceiling.

"And so must I," was the response of a friend, who imitated the movement of the first speaker as closely as if he had been his shadow.

"Before six months passes, unless some good fortune turns up, I shall be as completely out at the elbows and pockets as any poor devil in the land."

"Ditto. But, Dick, something must be done. Can't we hatch up a money-making scheme? Other people drive ahead at one plagey thing or another, and why not we? Set your brain to work and concoct something. We're no fools."

Richard Handy, the individual addressed, swung himself back and forth for some minutes on the hind legs of his chair, with his eyes still upon the ceiling. At last he said, as he let his chair come to its true position on the floor—"I'll tell you what we might do, Harry."

"Well, speak out. Anything that promises to pay!"

"Start a magazine or weekly newspaper."

"Polly! The country has more now than it can sustain."

"I'm not so sure of that. The public are always ready for some novelty."

"It won't do. I've seen the rise and fall, birth and death, of too many magazines and newspapers to have any faith in them. Those that are successful, keep the field in spite of new competitors. Godey's, Graham's, and one or two other magazines, and two or three newspapers, have got the lead, and being backed up by large subscription lists and large capitals, are able to present attractions and excellencies unattainable by any work that has not at least fifteen or twenty thousand subscribers—a number that no new magazine or paper can hope to get."

"For all that," replied Handy, "I'm clear that we can make a raise on a new magazine—temporary, at least, and it may be permanent. Everything must begin small."

"Nonsense! You can't begin to start a magazine on less than three or four hundred dollars, and you've got to sink that, and twenty times as much besides, before you reap a cent of profit on the speculation. I know. I've had my fingers burnt once, and understand the whole thing like a book."

"I don't care if you do. I've been thinking about a new magazine for a week or ten days past, and am satisfied that it will pay."

"And I am just as well satisfied that it won't pay. The idea is perfectly ridiculous to one who knows as much about such matters as I do."

"If we were to send out a flaming prospectus," said Handy, "promising all sorts of excellencies and novelties, and affirming that ample capital to carry out the scheme was pledged, and, moreover, were to offer our magazine for, say one-half of the price at which Godey's or Graham's is published, don't you think we could induce the country press to copy the thing extensively?"

"If we promised them an exchange."

"Very well. Now, don't you think that, with such a prospectus spread before half a million of people, there would be found a few hundreds ready to send on their one, two or ten dollars in advance?"

"Certainly I do."

"Even before the thing went to press?"

"No doubt of it."

"Now have I. Now, don't you begin to take?"

Harry, as he was called, or Henry Jenkins, brightened up considerably.

"I rather think I do, a little," said he.

"With a thousand or two dollars in hand, we could go on with the enterprise if it promised to pay well, do you understand?"

"Exactly. The view of the case didn't strike me."

"Then you agree with me that a new magazine is the thing?"

"I do, most emphatically."

"What shall we call it?"

"Some grand, soul-stirring name, of course!"

"How would 'The Pleiades' do?"

"Too grandiloquent."

"The Orion, then?"

"Bosh. No, no; it won't do to go up among the stars. It must be something for the ladies."

"The Peach Blossom; would be petite and tasteful?"

"Too much so. Let me see. Ah! I've got it—The Mirror of Taste and Gem of Fancy."

"Capital! That'll do exactly."

And after repeating the title of the proposed magazine until it sounded familiar, the discussion was resumed, when the character, appearance and general conduct of the work, if it should ever see the light. In due time the prospectus was hammered out by joint effort of these worthies. It promised everything, possible and impossible, that could be thought of; abused and criticised, by implication, all the periodicals at present were the terror of family use—all the decorations of our walls with them took the form of marble; mosaic floors occupied the place of our Brussels carpets in classic estimation; and the most fashionable style for a dining room was the representation in stone of crumbs and fragments of a feast, and apartments so finished were appropriately designated "unswept halls." Not most it be forgotten that a Roman bed-room, though inlaid with colored marble, had rarely if ever, a window—a custom which appears rather to have originated in some mistaken idea that the efficiency of glass, which was comparatively well known in those ages, and seems to have been used for ornamental purposes—Pliny speaks of glassy chambers; and Cardinal Bianchini records that, in the middle of the seventeenth century, as some workmen were digging on the ruins on Mount Coelius, they found a room belonging to an antique dwelling-house; the walls of which were covered with plates of glass, some of them tinged with various colors, others of their own natural hue. In the early days of Rome, any attempt at splendor in building or decoration appears to have been very unpopular, and consequently the house in the reign of Augustus still exhibited in its construction a whole tribe of their predecessors, with all their respective wives and families, will frequently be found. One small room is made to serve for the individuals of each branch of the family, sleeping in different beds, divided only by mats hanging from the ceiling; and one common room is used for eating.

Arabia, however, affords specimens of the house kind which, though rarely in use among modern generations, have at least the advantage of singular durability—we allude to the rock-hewn habitations taken notice of by all European travellers. The famous city of Petra, in Arabia, has been the theme of admiration and astonishment to all the tourists of recent times; but another town apparently far more ancient, and of greater extent still, exists in the North of Afghanistan, and is known throughout the East by the name of Bameean. The city consists of a great number of apartments cut out of the solid rock. It is said that in many of these the walls are adorned with paintings which look still fresh after centuries of desertion and solitude; some of them are adorned with niches and carved work. There are supposed to be more than twelve thousand of such habitations in Bameean, the country of the Afghans abounds with them; but the native, who are mostly Mohammedans, entertain a superstitious prejudice against inhabiting such homes. They have old traditions which declare them to have been the first habitations of mankind; and that strange city is casually mentioned by some of the classic authors; yet by whom its rocky abodes were excavated, who were its inhabitants, or what their uses, all has passed from the recollection of the world, and exists only in fabulous or uncertain tales.

The ancient homes of the world were almost in every point dissimilar to those of modern nations; among the polished Greeks and Romans the houses of the more wealthier classes were constructed with a portico in front, which opened into a large apartment intended for the reception of visitors, with its roof sloping down in the centre, in which there was a large square opening for the rain to run into a cistern placed below for that purpose. Beyond this apartment were the rooms for